Several persons have called in to ask for care instructions for silk. The following should help you keep your silk articles looking nice. As a fashion fabric, silk should be cleaned with care. Some silks are washable while others are not. Care depends on the construction and finish of the fabric as well as the style of the garment in which it is used. Lined apparel, the taffetas, brocades and failles, for example, require drycleaning. Many blouses and dresses may be washed, but labels should be checked for the manufacturer's recommended treatment of the garment.

Gentle care and speed are the key factors in washing. It is possible to machine wash silk if the washer has a slow agitation speed. A short wash time of about 2 minutes is also necessary to protect the dyes. Use warm water with a detergent or soap.

For hand washing, quickly swish the warm suds through the garment. Do not rub or twist. Rinse thoroughly and roll in a clean bath towel to remove excess moisture. Hang away from heat or sun until almost dry. Chlorine bleach should not be used on silk. Fabric softener helps to reduce static cling.

When ironing, use the lowest heat setting and press the garment while it is still moist. Silk should be pressed on the wrong side. The following dishwashing problems and remedies may help you to keep your china and crystal bright and shiny.

Problem: Gray or metal marks on ceramic dinnerware. The situation can occur when a knife or fork is drawn across the surface of the dinnerware. A gray mark is left since the dinnerware is harder than the metal.

Remedy: Remove the marks by gently scouring with a household cleanser, stainless steel cleaner or a plastic mesh pad.

Problem: Stains on cookware with a hard-coat anodic finish that is charcoal colored.

Remedy: Remove stains with a plastic scouring pad. This type of cookware must be handwashed; it can be permanently damaged by automatic dishwashing.

Problem: A film or streaks on glassware that may appear to be an iridescent coating. The condition can occur in a dishwasher when soft or softened water is used on soda-lime glass. The silicates in the dishwasher detergent become affixed to the glassware. Silica film, the first stage, is a rainbow-hued or iridescent coating. Etching is the advance form of silica film; glassware looks cloudy.

Remedy: Etched glassware cannot be restored but the action can be retarded, perhaps prevented by the following procedures. Use a minimum amount of dishwasher detergent necessary to clean the dishes; use a water temperature no higher than 140 degrees F; underload the dishwasher to allow for maximum rinsing; use a rinse agent to condition the surface of the water so that it will sheet off the glassware rapidly.

Problem: Cooked-on foods on glass-ceramic cookware.

Remedy: Use baking soda, a scouring liquid cleanser or a plastic scouring pad. Avoid scouring pads of copper, stainless steel or steel wool since they may scratch the surface.
