

Mrs. McNeill Given District 4-H Award

Mrs. Joye McNeill, leader of the Hillcrest 4-H Club, received a District 4-H Adult Volunteer Leader Award at District Activity Day in Goldsboro June 15. She was one of four leaders recognized in the 17 county district.

She received a framed certificate for her outstanding leadership in 4-H.

Mrs. McNeill has been a volunteer 4-H leader for about seven years. She has attended various activities such as the State Leaders Convention in Raleigh, 4-H State Congress, and 4-H District Retreats. She has served on various committees such as National 4-H Week, Crime Prevention, Achievement, and 4-H and Youth Committee. She organized a Lock-in for their club, assisted with local, district, and state demonstrations, fashion revue, talent show, fund raising projects, and project records. Mrs. McNeill has arranged workshops in CPR and various other topics and taught many classes on crafts as well as cake decorating.

The youth in the Hillcrest Club have also participated in many activities, and Mrs. McNeill urges them to get involved on the county, district, and state level.

Mrs. McNeill gets a lot of joy in working with these youth. She says, "My greatest pleasure, as a 4-H leader, is the personal pride attained as I watch 'my 4-H'ers achieving their goals, and I realize I have had a hand in guiding their actions."

According to Alice Lancaster, 4-H agent, Mrs. McNeill goes out of her way to encourage and help youth achieve their goals and participate in a variety of activities. Miss Lancaster says, "Mrs. McNeill is an ambassador for 4-H in her everyday life. She never fails to take an opportunity to promote 4-H. We are proud that she has received this honor of being recognized on the district level. Mrs. McNeill has been a real joy to work with this year."

Niven, coordinator of the Hoke County Emergency Management Agency. She also does secretarial work for the Hoke County Parks and Recreation Department since the department no longer has a secretary of its own. [Staff photo.]

Amendment Affects Historic Property

Attorney General Rufus L. Edmisten said Friday an amendment to North Carolina's historic preservation law brings most state-owned property under the control of local historic district commissions.

"The state will be working with local authorities to be certain that any changes to historic properties in their district will be suitable and compatible to that particular community's environment and needs," Edmisten said.

The law now provides that state-owned property in a local historic district may not be altered, remodeled, moved or demolished until the local historic district commission approves the changes.

Under the law, review procedures for state historic properties will be handled faster because any disputed matters can be appealed by either side within thirty days.

Disputes concerning state government buildings will be settled by the N.C. Historical Commission, using a uniform state-wide standard.

Property of the University of North Carolina is not included in the new law. However, Edmisten said that University officials agreed to cooperate in finding a way to be included in the law.

Sen. Henson P. Barnes (D-Wayne) and Rep. Bertha M. Hold (D-Alamance), sponsors of the amendment, have agreed to continue their efforts on behalf of historic preservation legislation proposed by the Attorney General's Committee on Local Historic Preservation.

Edmisten said, "My preservation law committee has worked long and hard to produce the best preservation package in the country. This makes the state of North Carolina a truly good neighbor in every community."

The law immediately will affect historic districts already organized in Asheville - Buncombe, Bath, Burlington, Chapel Hill, Charlotte, Edenton, Graham, Greensboro, Hillsborough, Madison, Murfreesboro, Raleigh, Rockingham, Salisbury, Tarboro, Wake Forest, Washington, Wilmington and Winston-Salem.
