APPLIANCE CARE - If several people in your family use the same appliance, it may shorten its useful life. And the reason is simple.

The routine cleaning and maintenance that an appliance needs may be neglected -- because each family member thinks the other guy will take care of it.

So you might save time, energy and wear on your appliances if you think through a routine maintenance system.

You might set up a file that includes all use and care manuals, appliance warranties, purchase information and a card index of maintenance records.

Or your family might divvy up the jobs and each person might be responsible for the upkeep of two or more appliances.

Whatever method you choose, keep in mind that well-maintained appliances last longer.

REPLACE APPLIANCE - Refrigerators, ranges and washing machines don't last forever. So don't wait until the day an appliance stops running to start saving for a replacement.

To make a rough estimate of how long it will be before one of your appliances quits permanently, look at the average service life expectancy. As a rule, most major home appliances are used from ten to fifteen years.

Most dishwashers and washing machines are used eleven years. Barring major problems, clothes dryers and ranges are used longer -- from twelve to fourteen years. A refrigerator may last fifteen years -- a freezer for twenty.

Since most big appliances cost hundreds of dollars, it's a good idea to have some money set aside for that replacement -- before you need it.

SERVICE CONTRACT -- When you buy a new appliance, you may have the chance to buy a service contract -- which will provide insurance against repair bills.

If you think you might like to buy one, be sure to read it carefully to find out what service you're supposed to get. Will you get top priority over appliance owners without contracts? Will the repair service make calls on holidays and weekends if it's an emergency? Is there a limit on the number of free service calls the company will make?

Check to see if there are any exclusions or added costs in the contract. And ask if the entire appliance is covered or just some of the parts? Find out if you have to pay the travel costs for the repairman.

Finally, find out if you can cancel the contract if you change your mind.

Alice Glisson State Council Chairman

Alice D. Glisson, assistant vice president, United Carolina Bank, Raeford, has been named chairman of the North Carolina State Council for the National Association of Bank Women, Inc. (NABW).

As chairman, Mrs. Glisson serves as the link between North Carolina's NABW members and NABW's national and regional officers to bring more NABW programs and activities to members.

Mrs. Glisson has been an active member of NABW since 1979. She has served NABW as vice chairman of the South Central Group, State Conference Hospitality chairman, and was to become chairman of the South Central Group prior to her appointment as State Council chairman.

The National Association of Bank Women's 27,000 members hold official or managerial positions in banks or banking institutions in all 50 states and Canada. NABW's programs and services are aimed at increasing career opportunities for women in banking and contributing to the advancement of the banking industry.

Mrs. Glisson began her career in banking in 1969 with The Bank of Raeford (now United Carolina Bank) and has worked in various areas of the bank. She has completed numerous AIB courses at Fayetteville Technical Institute, where she is working on her banking and finance degree and is a graduate of the North Carolina School of Banking Advanced Management Program through the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Mrs. Glisson is active in Raeford First Baptist Church and serves as treasurer of the Hoke Music Boosters. She is married to John W. Glisson and they have two children, Linda and John II.
