

Potato Is Hot The World Over

National Geographic News Service

WASHINGTON -- Mashed into a side dish or fried into fast food, the potato is easy to underestimate. But potatoes are actually the world's bread and butter, according to the International Potato Center in Lima, Peru. Potatoes yield more nutritious food more quickly on less land and in harsher climates than any other major food crop.

This amazing vegetable is a South American native brought back to Europe from Peru by 16th-century conquistadors. Its own world conquest now complete, King Potato grows in more countries than any crop except corn.

Robert E. Rhoades of the International Potato Center writes in the May issue of National Geographic: "The average annual crop (291 million tons) could cover a four-lane superhighway circling the world six times."

More Protein Per acre

Produced in 130 of the world's 167 independent countries, one year's crop is worth $106 billion at consumer prices, Rhoades reports.

Potatoes are fourth, after wheat, corn, and rice, in world production, but because of multiple harvests, yield the most protein and food energy per acre.

They are remarkably adaptable; potatoes grow from below sea level behind Dutch dikes to almost 14,000 feet up in the chilly Andes and Himalayas, from the Arctic Circle to the Strait of Magellan, and in the scorching deserts of Australia and Africa.

Brimming with vitamin C, many of the B vitamins, and iron, the potato is so nutritious that a man in Scandinavia lived healthily for 300 days on only spuds dressed with a bit of margarine. And eating a potato without rich toppings is no more fattening than eating a pear -- the potato is 99.9 percent fat free.

Without potatoes, meat production would slump and meat prices skyrocket; nearly half the world's crop is fed to livestock.

Potatoes are also distilled into vodka and aquavit, processed into starch, paste, and dye, and converted to fuel. Researchers have shown that one acre of potatoes in one year's time can yield 1,200 gallons of ethyl alcohol, or potato gasohol, for cars.

Rhoades notes that tomatoes, tobacco, and eggplants are related to the potato, but the sweet potato is not -- even though its Indian name, batata, became the English word potato.

Thousands of Varieties

The familiar brown oval spud belongs to the species Solanum tuberosum, one of eight cultivated throughout the world. Most of the world's crop and all potatoes grown in the United States belong to this species.

In the Andes, however, farmers cultivate all eight species, embracing as many as 3,000 of the 5,000 or more potato varieties.

Rhoades describes the varieties: "The colors of the rainbow and more, many looked like miniature pineapples, some like coral snakes, and others like bright red cherries or purple gumdrops."

When Europe's potato crops fell victim to late blight in the mid-19th century, a million people died in Ireland, where potatoes were the chief food. Now scientists believe that genetic engineering of potatoes holds promise for a 21st-century solution to the world food crisis.

The International Potato Center's goal is to make the potato available and inexpensive to everyone by the year 2000. They are crossing wild and native varieties with modern high-yielding ones, attempting to manipulate the potato's built-in thermostat to stretch its natural adaptability to both cold highlands and steaming tropics.

The wild and native varieties contain genes resistant to many of the 265 diseases and pests known to plague the potato. The center breeds for this genetic material and distributes seed for worldwide testing, generally in developing countries.

Pomatoes and Topatoes

In West Germany, genetic engineers have fused two botanical cousins, the potato and tomato, to produce pomatoes and topatoes. These hybrids, they hope, will someday produce food above and below ground, and share their best qualities.

In Asia and South America scientists are pioneering the commercial growing of potatoes by "true seed," the tiny seeds produced in the potato plant's berry. By this method potatoes can be grown much like grains.

Only a 100-pound sack of seed is needed to sow 1,000 acres, much less than the 1,000 tons of potato tubers needed to seed the same amount of land conventionally.

food in many poor nations. A common expression in the Dominican Republic, "estar en las papas" (to be in the potatoes), means a person is successful enough to afford more than a banana diet. And in the Philippines, housewives might top off their shopping carts with a few potatoes for the status they imply.

Furnishings For Energy Savings

Energy-saving comfort is a major factor in home decorating today, as was explained, in part one of this story, by Wilma S. Hammett, extension interior design specialist at North Carolina State University. Wall and floor coverings can help achieve that comfort.

Fabric or vinyl wall-coverings can give a room a warmer feeling and help reduce air infiltration through corners and areas where walls and windows meet.

"Wallcoverings add more texture to a room," Mrs. Hammett explains. "Surfaces with more texture give a warmer feeling than those that are smooth."

She says that in order to save an artificial lighting, a light color wallcovering should be used. Dark coverings absorb light and thus force you to add extra artificial light.

Light-colored paneling, too, can give a cozy atmosphere to a room while adding some insulative value.

Floor coverings also have an effect on energy use, Mrs. Hammett says. They can insulate against winter heat loss or, like vinyl, terrazzo, brick or slate, they can stay cool year-round.

Choose light to medium carpet colors to reflect more light, just as in wallcoverings. A pad under the carpet will both increase the life of the carpet and provide extra insulation. Urethane foam is best.

Don't forget area rugs to add warmth. They can be used even over wall-to-wall carpeting to define living areas or great rooms.

Again remember, as the specialist notes, that decorating decisions may not save you a great deal of money, but taken together they can provide a more comfortable living environment on the money you do have to spend.
