

You and Your Pet

Dear Doctor: What should you do when you come across a dog that's been hit by a car and is yelping in pain? That happened to me. The person who hit it obviously drove off without stopping.

Answer: Approach any unidentified injured dog carefully. There is a possibility of being bitten and if the animal is a stray, it could very well be rabid. Recommended procedure is to cover the animal with a blanket or rug, roll the animal up gently, re-open the blanket as a sling and carry by the edges.

If you are adept, you can muzzle the animal with a tie, belt, rope or gauze. You can then take the injured animal to an emergency clinic for treatment.

If the animal is owned (a good argument for being sure your pet is tagged), you can hope that the owner will praise you for your good works and pay the bill. If the animal is unowned and you do not want to accept responsibility for its care, your only other choice is to call the dog pound or humane society where it will be put down.

Regrettably, there is no easy answer to your question.

Problems of this nature are mushrooming as people abandon their dogs, for a variety of reasons, or refuse to take responsibility for them leading to a growing population of strays who then become a burden to people, like you, who care.

Dear Doctor: Are rabies still a threat? I haven't read much about animal quarantine lately.

Answer: The incidence of rabies rose 9% in Indiana last year following a previous increase the year before.

So, yes, rabies is a threat, fed by the number of unvaccinated strays roaming in our communities.

The problem is particularly serious in the rural areas where rabid animals, especially skunks, pass the disease on by biting domesticated animals.

Dear Doctor: I have a dog, part poodle, and she has a skin disease. The veterinarian doesn't know what causes her ailment but said I could try giving her a diet of rice and hamburger which I am doing now. She is 14 years old.

Answer: Your veterinarian apparently feels that an allergy is causing the skin disease. A diet of rice and hamburger is prescribed in such cases.

If the problem persists, you may want to ask your veterinarian to test your pet more thoroughly or you may want to seek a second opinion, possibly from a veterinarian specializing in skin diseases. The important thing for a pet as old as yours is to keep her as comfortable as possible.
