THAT'S ENTERTAINMENT: Paul Gorski, violinist for the trio who is representing the North Carolina Symphony entertains children from Hoke County schools.

EDITORIAL STUDY -- Third grade student David Johnson (standing center) explains the editorial page to fellow pupils in Ethelyn Baker's West Hoke class. The students were studying the newspaper as part of Newspaper in Education Week.

ENTERTAINMENT WITH STRINGS: The string trio representing the N.C. Symphony entertained at a luncheon held at the Raeford Presbyterian Church for local N.C. Symphony contributors. Of the 41 counties contributing, Hoke was ranked seventh in individual giving and was in the top 13 counties in total money raised in the state. Pictured here are; Paul Gorski, violin (right), Michael Stoughton, cello (center) and Hugh Pertridge, viola (left).

W. Hoke Students Study Newspaper

Warren Johnston, news editor of The News-Journal, visited Ethelyn Baker's (assistant-Joanne Bease,) classroom during Newspaper in Education Week and related some of his experiences as a news person. The editor, who has been a journalist for five years, talked to the third graders about the educational requirements needed to become a successful journalist. He also explained the long hours involved in gathering information and putting a story together. "Although a lot of work is involved", Johnston said, "the results are rewarding and satisfying. The feeling of accomplishment makes me happy; especially when I break a story." He then proceeded to explain to the students the meaning of "breaking" a story. According to the news editor, a journalist should be one of the most informed persons in town because he/she must be aware of what's going on; therefore does a tremendous amount of reading. The questions the students asked indicated that this visitor had definitely aroused their interest in reading the newspaper, and it appears that this renewed interest will continue throughout their lives.
