Jury Pay Just $8 Per Day

If you are summoned to serve on a jury, you may well lose any compensation which you would ordinarily receive from your employment if you could work that day.

North Carolina, however, provides that you will be paid $8 per day for the time you sit as a juror and $30 per day for each day you serve in excess of five days in a 24 month period.

Unfortunately, $8 per day will perhaps not go very far in compensating you for your time. Even if you work the usual eight-hour day and receive minimum wage, you would be losing money if you served on a jury and did not go to work.

A defense attorney in a murder case several years ago made a pretrial motion that would have allowed the jurors much more money than they would ordinarily receive under the North Carolina General Statutes.

Law For Laypersons

In the case of State v. Setzer, reported in Volume 42 of the North Carolina Court of Appeals Reports at page 98, the defense attorney asked that the jurors be paid their weekly wages and, in addition, that funds be provided for care of their dependents. He cited no authority for his request, but he argued that without such payments qualified jurors with financial difficulties would ask to be excused from jury duty. He added that even if jurors with financial difficulties agreed to serve anyway, they would be distracted from the trial by their "instinctive concerns about their own survival."

The trial court denied the defense attorney's motion, and it was appealed to the North Carolina Court of Appeals.

The judge who wrote the opinion for the court called the argument ingenious, but refused to go along with it. He cited North Carolina General Statutes section 7A-312 which clearly provides that a juror "shall receive $8 per day." Since the legislature had spoken on compensation for jurors, the judge felt that the court was bound by that provision and could do nothing further in paying the jury.

In addition, the judge noted that the jury duty is not a form of employment, but a responsibility owed by a citizen to the state.
