"We have added the center in place of being expelled or suspended from school," Westall said.

According to Westall, the alter-native education center keeps children with discipline problems in school and "off the streets."

'Instead of putting them out of school, we are allowing them to carry on with their school work in a different environment," Westall

"I think it is helping."

Although Westall is pleased with the declining drop-out rate, he said none of the educational staff were completely satisfied.

"Our goal is to try to get to a 0% drop-out rate," Westall said.

"It may not be realistic to think in those terms but we can keep try-ing to bring them down," Westall added

"Most of the people I have ar-rested have ranged from 25-50,"

Burgess said. "In my opinion, they are the ones that just don't seem to care or simply don't believe they will get caught."

The law, which became effective October 1, gives law enforcement officials the right to arrest anyone they believe has been impaired by an alcoholic beverage or drugrelated substance.

If convicted, the DWI offenders can be sentenced to perform community service work or to attend special driver education classes.

The offender is also required to pay at least a $100 fine to reimburse the state for administrative costs incurred during the action.

Despite the stiffer penalties, Burgess said he did not think those who "really wanted to drink and drive" would stay off the highways.

'These laws can prevent a casual drinker from driving, but I don't think it will prevent a prob-
