A little light news

By Kay Thomas
Mrs. Pauline Freeman McFadyen has written these "Memories of a happy eighth grade and Sarah McFadyen Brown." Mrs. Brown died last week and her family gathered here in Raeford at the home of her cousin, Neill McFadyen.

Sixty-four years ago when I was a very happy eighth grader in Raeford High School, we experienced many changes. We changed classes for the first time, and we had domestic science for the first time. How could any of us ever forget!

We had two new students and, of course, that caused quite a stir. The Sneads moved to Raeford and the McFadyen Family, missionaries to China, came to Cousin Christianna McLaughlin's for their year's visit.

I had never met Sarah McFadyen who was in the eighth grade with us. We soon became such close friends that we had formed a little group we called "The Jolly Five." The members were Addie Mae Gatlin, Isabel Jean Lamont, Mary Douglas Smith, and me, Pauline Freeman. Sarah often talked about her school in China, Shanghai American School, and her dear friend Lucy Grier.

Our experiences in domestic science provided many memories. We learned to measure basting stitches exactly one-quarter inch. We went to the store to choose material for cotton kimonas. Sarah had never been in a store and she cried; we cheered her and took her there.

Sarah soon learned that she could sew better than the rest of us. I remember I chose what I thought was a lovely pink crepe for my kimona. It had large lavender wisteria over it. Of course, I made the back with the wisteria upside down! We made gowns, and I sewed the sleeve in the neck. I finally learned on baby clothes. That was as far as I ever got.

Devote Austin came in from lunch one day and hung his cap on the black board. He had our curiosity up, we didn't know he had slipped in the room during lunch hour and put a tack in the board.

When Christmas came everyone went wild. We forgot Latin and everything. The boys brought mistletoe, hung it over the teacher's head to steal a kiss. I think Arch Graham was several years older than we were, but he stayed in the eighth grade long enough to steal kisses from our pretty new teachers.

We had a huge class that year, but only eleven of us graduated from high school. Some never did, some a year or so later.

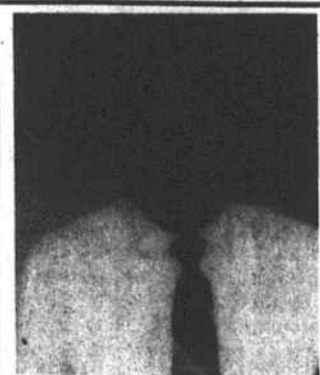

All too soon this childhood happiness was over, and I was embroidering "teddies" and getting my trunk packed for Meredith. Sarah and Lucy Grier went to Agnes Scott, and I never saw my friend Sarah again.

The American Heart Month Campaign informs us that heart disease is killing us faster than cancer and accidents combined. But, hope exists.

Death rates have been declining slowly, primarily due to three factors: Improved treatment devices; better medication; and increased awareness of lifestyle changes that help ward off heart disease.

By now you should know the lifestyle: No smoking; weight control; reduced fat; avoid anxiety; eliminate alcohol; and exercise regularly. So do your part, and let your pharmacy provide you the latest medications and advice. You are important to us.
