The Asylum Sewage.

The item yesterday about the great amount of sickness at Caraleigh naturally attracts attention. THE VISITOR hears today that two years ago or more the directors of the insane asylum were urged to alter the arrangements for the disposal of the asylum sewage, by running it through pipes to Tucker's meadow and there tapping one of the city sewers which has its outfall near the N. C. R. R. bridge over Walnut creek. But the directors have never done anything in this direction. The VISITOR truly hopes that the pressure of public opinion will force them to take the step and not continue to permit this sewage to be emptied into the creek right at Caraleigh mills.

IN JAIL

CHARGED WITH MURDER AND OUTRAGE.

John Mills is Said to Have Thus Treated His Niece

Last night at 11 o'clock deputies W. C. Johnston, J. E. Council and J. D. Council left Apex with George Mills, white, who stands charged with the murder and attempted rape of his niece, Miss Iana Wimberly. The officers drove through the country and the reason they left at such an hour was that if Mills had remained there last night he would have been lynched. Mills is about 45 years of age, and is of a low order of intelligence. His eyesight is very poor and he is small in stature. His character is not good. Some years ago he was charged with an outrageous assault upon a white woman, his cousin, then married, and the proof of her bad character alone saved him.

It is alleged that he has made several attempts of the kind at various times.

Mills stayed a good deal at the home of his niece, Miss Iana Wimberly, who was a stoutly built and attractive young woman, 17 years old. They left the place, which is a little over four miles from Apex, about sunset Wednesday afternoon, to go to the house of Mr. John Jenks, a mile or so distant, after some flowers. Mills was next heard of about 2 o'clock that night, when he appeared at Mr. Wimberly's house. He aroused the family and this is in substance the tale he told:

He said that as he and Miss Wimberly went along they came near the old Vaughan house, now vacant, and she proposed to go to the door and look in; that as they stood at the door, he on one side, she on the other, she was struck on the head by some person in the house and knocked into the house; both of them at the time standing outside the door; that he sprang back and some person said "Leave or I'll kill you." Another voice was then heard repeating the threat. He then ran and became lost in the woods, so it was late before he reached the girl's home. He said further that as he left the deserted house he heard Iana cry out "O, Lord, have mercy! Don't kill me!" He says it was then dusk and that he wandered about for hours. He told the Wimberlys he reckoned Iana was at the Vaughan house, dead; that somebody had certainly knocked her in the head.

The Wimberlys aroused their neighbors and a party of eight went to the old Vaughan house. They found it in a freshly ploughed field, and there were plainly visible the footprints of a man and a woman leading to the door, while only the tracks of a man were found leading away from the house. About two feet inside the door lay Miss Wimberly. To all appearances she was dead. Her head was literally beaten to pieces. Her temples were crushed in and there was a ghastly hole in the side of her head. The entire rear of the skull was visible. There were evidences of a struggle. On the floor were found the prints of five nails made by a footprint. It was found that Mills' shoe made just such an impression, having the five nails. Just outside the door was found the instrument with which the poor young woman had been struck. It was a dogwood stick, forked, and on it was fresh blood.

Drs. Moore, of Apex, and A. T. Cotton, of Morrisville, were at once summoned. They saw that there was no hope of saving the girl's life. They removed some bone from the side of her skull. She never spoke, but occasionally moaned. It was evident that she had been struck several powerful blows. It was also clear that an attempt had been made to outrage her, but the physicians are of opinion that this did not succeed.

Mills was yesterday afternoon taken before justices L. D. Baucum and John Burns and given a full hearing. He went on the stand and his evidence was about like the story he told Peter Wimberly, the girl's father. The piece of wood with which she was struck was a harness rack which was on the wall of the deserted house. Mills has told several stories about the affair.

It was about 10 40 o'clock last night when the deputies left with him. Soon after he was placed in jail he was made to change his old clothing for new. This was done to have the old clothing as evidence, as there is blood on it. The pockets are bloody, this being caused by his handprints. It is said that Mills is weakminded. He said today in jail that if the guards had let him go by his home last night he would have got other clothes. He was then told that if he had been taken there he would not have needed any clothes for he would have been lynched. At this he laughed and said "They can't get me now, can they?" News reached here at 10 o'clock this morning of the death of Miss Wimberly. A great deal of sympathy is expressed for her family.
