DEBS.

"Let mothers wail and children sob,
Let men stand round without a job,
I scorn all law, I and my mob,"
Said Debs.

"Let ice give out, I'll not give in,
Let sick men die, I'm bound to win,
Let courts enjoin, who cares a pin!"
Said Debs.

Samson, with bone of muckle might,
Hordes of Philistines put to flight,
And by that self-same simple means
Debs "holds up" commerce here, it seems.

Our forefathers, in grim delight,
Told of that ancient Hebrew's fight,
And we, their sons, bereft and lone,
Look on while Debs wields that old bone.

Glory to Debs, whose jaws of brass
Can make a nation fear as brass!
—New York Sun.

How the Trolley Works.

Sometimes what a man thinks he knows is more entertaining than the actual facts. Such was the description of the works of the trolley given to a Brooklyn Eagle reporter by a man who professed intimate knowledge of the mysteries of electric rail-roading. It would be thought that every Brooklynite should know all about the trolley. That this is not the case is shown by this man's amusingly and solemnly absurd explanation: "You see that little copper wheel on top of the pole that runs along pressing against the wire," said he; "well, that's what makes the electricity. That, sir, was the invention. The pole from the car roof with the copper wheel on the end of it is what they call the carbon. Now, some fellow discovered that such a wheel on the end of a carbon running against a steel wire created the electricity. The faster the copper wheel revolves the more electricity it makes and the faster the car goes. That's the reason the little copper wheel is made so small. Then the extra power, more than is necessary to keep the car going, you know, is accumulated in those things at each end of the car, and when the driver wants to start her up he just turns his crank and lets out enough electricity to start her. Then the copper wheel on top of the carbon starts generating, and so on. Great invention, sir; great invention."

The Most of It.

They had wandered far from the merry bathers, and in the shade of a beeting crag, where the rippling waves spoke in soft union with their thoughts, they paused.

"My darling," he whispered, "I trust our engagement will be short."

She looked into his face with a puzzled look in her great, gray eyes.

"Of course—"

(Her every word burned into his soul.)

"—you don't imagine I can afford to pay $10 a day at that hotel and fool with long engagements, do you?"
