Make the Fair a Certainty.

The people of Raleigh will be called on to subscribe some $2,000 to aid in the payment of premiums at the next state fair. A careful estimate shows that the average fair is worth $20,000 net to this city. It ought to be very little trouble to get the $2,000. This and the $1,500 state appropriation will make the premiums all right. The gate receipts can be used to liquidate the debt of $4,500. Raleigh must not let the fair go by default. Help Col. Orr and Mr. Nichols make it a big success. That is the way to talk and act.

The Weather For Tomorrow.

Local forecast for Raleigh and vicinity: Sunday, fair warmer.

SOUTH RALEIGH

IS NOW QUITE A LIVELY PART OF THE CITY.

The Roller Flouring Mills are Almost Ready to Begin.

The Mills manufacturing company is certainly developing a fine plant on lower Fayetteville street. The wagon factory is enlarged by the addition of a two story storage room. The old boiler house has been torn down and the boilers removed. The steam is to be furnished from a central battery of boilers, three in number. These will give steam for the engines at the wagon factory, saw mill and flouring mill.

The boilers are in place in their brick building and in a few days will be tested. The building is complete save the roof. Near it is the dry kiln, to which cars will run from the saw mill, on an elevated railway.

The saw mill is ready for work as soon as steam is turned on. Many logs are already delivered, ready to be converted into lumber. All the plant is alongside the Southern railway.

The finishing touches are being given the Farina flouring mills. The building is three and a half stories high, and also has a basement, in which is the engine. The wheat mill is delivered from the railway cars through a spout, and is not handled any more until it is packed into the sacks as flour. It is first taken up in the elevators, the tubes of which are as thick as organ pipes, to the separators and cleaners. Then it is weighed, goes into the bins, passes on to the sizers, and passes through twelve sets of steel rollers, alternately rising or falling in the elevators between each set of rollers. It next goes through silken sieves, and the bran is sent on to the bran rollers and the middlings worked on. There are twelve bolting machines. It requires about five hours for 100 bushels of wheat to make this long run and come out as flour. Every process is carried on automatically. All the woodwork is highly polished and as clean as a pin, and carefully varnished on the exterior. The flour passes down from bins into the packers, which are also automatic, and which put the precisely proper weight in the sacks. There are two flour packing machines and one bran packer. The capacity of the mill is 500 bushels of wheat in 24 hours. Mr. T. B. Reynolds, of Luray, Va., is the superintendent of the mill. He considers the location and equipment to be first-class. When in operation the mills will be quite an interesting place to visit.

Mr. F. M. Moya, grand master, has issued a circular to the masters of all the Masonic lodges in the state, in which he says the grand lodge will convene at Oxford Tuesday, June 25th next. The meeting is of as much importance to the craft as the annual meeting in Raleigh in January. All the property owned and controlled by the grand lodge is situated at Oxford. Republican Primaries Next Tuesday.

Last evening the court house was filled with republicans, at the mass meeting. It was primarily to urge thorough registration, and secondly to see whether the mayor, etc., should be nominated by a mass convention which J. C. L. Harris wanted, or a delegated convention which John Nichols wanted. The latter won the day. James H. Young presided, having been nominated by C. T. Bailey, while E. S. Cheek, nominated by Nichols, got a few votes. It was decided on Nichols' motion that next Tuesday evening there should be ward primaries to nominate aldermen and also to elect delegates to a city convention next Thursday, when a mayor, clerk and tax collector will be nominated. The convention was in session only an hour.

A Convict at Large.

Night before last night a white convict named Bell, under life sentence, escaped from the penitentiary. Inquiry was made of officials there, and they said they had no idea how he escaped. They were asked if any more than the one had escaped and said no, and that none escaped last night. Bill was tracked last night, it is said, to a point near the park, and men with lanterns were moving around there in lively style and several shots, perhaps seven or eight, were fired. This all caused considerable stir, and there were rumors that several convicts had escaped last night. The facts as above given came from deputy warden Fleming. The penitentiary authorities are on the trail of Bell, they say.
