IN THE SUPERIOR COURT

There Was a New Feature in the Cram Case.

This was motion day in the superior court. The case of Mrs. Cram against William Cram, for alimony, was taken up. A motion was made on the part of the defendant to be permitted to amend his pleading, charging that at Brookville, Canada, about 1879. Mrs. Cram was the proprietress of a house of ill-fame; that while under the law there this was unlawful, yet the plea was conducted under the pretense of being a dress-making establishment, while she was in fact keeping the house. This statement was bitterly denied by T. M. Argo, Esq., of counsel for Mrs. Cram. Judge Starbuck denied for the present the motion of Mr. Cram to thus amend his pleading.

HOLLAND GONE.

HE TELLS HIS WIFE HE WILL NOT COMMIT SUICIDE

He Turned Over All His Church's Funds and Papers.

Yesterday morning at Charlotte about 9:30 o'clock, Messrs. Burroughs and Grier, members of the building committee of the First Presbyterian church, went to the house of ex-cashier J. R. Holland of the Merchants' and Farmers' bank, to get some papers from him. As they went up the walk, they met one of Holland's children, who said to them, "Papa isn't here." They thought nothing of it, thinking the child meant he was up the street. They went in and saw another member of the family, who simply said to them that Holland was not there; that he had gone away the night before. They were given the church papers, as Holland had thought of them and left them with his family to be turned over to the committee. Grier and Burroughs agreed that they would say nothing of Holland's flight, and they did not except to the church committee, so it was not until noon that the city was aware of it. The knowledge of it, like everything else connected with the affair, was brought to light by bank examiner Miller. Miller asked where Holland was, saying he had not been to the bank during the morning. George E. Wilson went to the house to inquire if he was there. He discovered what Grier and Burroughs had found several hours before.

No one could answer the questions "Where has he gone?" and "How did he get away?" "Did he go on the train, horseback, or how?" "Who gave him money?" "Who assisted him to leave?"

Different theories were advanced as to the manner and time of Holland's flight. Some did not believe that he had left the city; thinking it impossible for him to do so, as he was so well known that he must needs be recognized. Others think he left, going horseback, as it was reported that one of his horses was missing and that he had taken the train some miles from Charlotte. He had no money unless friends came to the rescue, and is of such a marked type of features that he could be easily traced. Such a thing as his leaving had not dawned upon the public. He told president McAden that he would die before he would leave.

Last night a watch was kept on his dwelling and outhouses for some time, as it was imagined that he was concealed there somewhere and might attempt to leave in the night. A rumor of suicide was started, but was quickly proved to be without foundation. Holland's family, the Charlotte Observer learns, feel no uneasiness on this score, as he promised them he would not take his life.

U. S. district attorney Glenn is chagrined, now that the bird had flown, that he had not sworn out a warrant for the ex-cashier and had him taken in custody, and very frankly expressed his regret that he had yielded to importunity in the matter. The error in trusting to Holland not depart is one that is now perhaps universally recognized.

It is believed that had Holland stayed and braved the affair out, when his trial came on, he would have gotten off with one half time. Now, it is said by one in authority, he will in all probability get the full time—ten years.

The note that the missing cashier forged, using J. H. Sloan's name, was given to bank examiner Miller by Holland as among his assets. After Miller saw it, and Holland's purpose had been answered, the note, it is supposed, was destroyed, and it cannot now be found, although a diligent search has been made. Miller supposed it had been torn up, and looked carefully for the pieces, but there was no trace of it. The supposition is that Holland burned it. Holland if caught will be tried for forgery as well as for embezzlement.

We are dispensing all kinds of siffrs and cold drinks. Our chocolate is "just lovely."

ANOTHER FEMALE 'SHINER.

Deputy Collector Walker and Jones Catch Them Every Time.

Last Monday morning deputies Wiley Jones and Walker from the office of deputy collector Simmons captured a male moonshiner and also a female one in Johnston county. Yesterday they went to Osgood, Chatham county, accompanied by deputy marshal Olive of New Hill, who a few days ago had spotted a "still." Olive had gone to serve a warrant on Lonny Womble and saw the latter behave in such a way as to show that there was a still near.

So Olive sent for the deputy collectors because he couldn't destroy the still. The posse captured Womble, who it is said has been a moonshiner all of thirty years.

They also found, helping him in his moonshine work, Lila Thomas, a white woman aged 45. Both of them were taken to Sanford, before U. S. commissioner Carr. He gave them until today to put up bail for their appearance at the approaching term of federal court here. If they don't give this to jail they will go. The woman in the case took a great fancy to deputy Walker and begged him to pray for her. She put her hands caressingly on his head and said: "If you have the love of God in your heart stay here and pray for me." She was standing in a public road when she thus entreated him. Again and again she renewed her request. Mr. Walker's clerical appearance misled her into taking him for a preacher. There was another woman at Womble's house, but is said that she had "nothing to do with the case."

Why Mr. Bunn Took the Place.

The Washington correspondent of the Charlotte Observer says the explanation of ex-congressman Bunn's being appointed postmaster at Rocky Mount is that finding opposition to his nomination, of Mr. Wilcox, who resides in the Nash county portion of the town, he resolved, after discovering that the opposition would not be withdrawn, to take the appointment himself and let Mr. Wilcox be assistant. Wilcox is his brother-in-law. Of course Mr. Bunn will not abandon his important law practice to be postmaster of a small town. He simply retains the postmastership for Nash county and the fourth district and keeps it in the family.

The organ and the communion service formerly used in the Second Presbyterian church here have been presented to the Presbyterian church at Kingston, in loving memory of the late Rev. Dr. J. M. Atkinson, and the Kinston church takes the name of the "Atkinson Memorial" church.
