THE MORTGAGE BILL.

Some of the Arguments of Council on this Novel Question.

The supreme court will probably hear argument in the much-talked-of mortgage bill case this week, having agreed to "advance" the case. The arguments in the superior court were interesting. Ex-judge Strong attacked, in a very able style, the validity of the act, and contended that the court ought not to decide the act at all.

F. H. Busbee, of counsel for Elias Carr, contended that the case was without any precedent and that never before had a paper professing to be a statute of a sovereign state been assailed for such gross fraud. The bill had never entered the doors of the senate and in the house had been tabled. The question presented to the court, he contended, was whether the act is a statute or not and the court must decide.

Thomas M. Argo, who appeared for the judgement creditors of Wyatt, contended that of the only cases in which the validity of an act formally ratified can be inquired into are: when the unconstitutionality of the act appears upon its face; and where certain constitutional pre-requisites of formal compliance in passage must appear in the act itself. He contended that the ratification of the act is in the presence of the two houses and is the vitalizing of the act in its enactment, and that it conclusively presupposes compliance with all the pre-requisites.

Armistead Jones for secretary Coke contended that the courts could not abrogate an act; that only the legislature could undo its own work; that the supreme court had said that the signatures of the speaker and the president of the senate so fixed an act that it could not be impeached in the courts, and make it a matter of record. He denied that the courts could amend an act of the legislature.

Judge Starbuck decided as follows: This action coming on for hearing, on motion of attorneys for defendant Coke, it is ordered and adjudged that it be dismissed for want of jurisdiction of the court to grant the relief begged for in the complaint, on the ground that the court cannot go behind the ratification of an act as same now appears in the office of secretary of state.

The judge dissolved the restraining order in the Wyatt case. Judge Starbuck said he felt sure he had no jurisdiction and that while he saw danger in either course there was more probability that acts which were properly passed would not appear on the journals than that acts which did not pass should so appear.

BATTLE WITH ROBBERS.

A Hotel Clerk Shot by one of the Train-Robbers.

St. JOSEPH, Mo., May 5.—Thomas Farrall, of St. Louis, one of the gang of Burlington train robbers, who for a year have eluded capture, is a prisoner at the city hospital with two bullets through his lungs, and will die. He received the fatal shots in a battle with policeman Barry, Shea and Franz and ex-sheriff Carson tonight, after having first sent a bullet from his revolver through the body of Richard Haas, night clerk of St. George hotel, mistaking Haas for William Haas, the proprietor, who had yesterday given a tip that an attempt would be made to hold up the Kansas City, St. Joseph and Council Bluffs express train soon after it left this city.

The scene of the hold-up was to be on the identical spot of the robbery of a year ago. The train was heavily guarded with officers armed with Winchester, but the robbers got wind of the trap and did not appear.

Farrall and a pal entered the St. George hotel last night Farrall advanced to where Richard Haas, the clerk, was standing. "Take that," were the words spoken by Farrall as he shot Haas down. The bandit immediately discovered his mistake and ran out of the door, revolver in hand, and called to his pal, "I killed the wrong man." Officer Barry was a short distance away, and called on the robbers to halt. Their answer was four shots in rapid succession, one of the bullets striking Barry in the palm of the right hand, and passing through, badly shattering the bones.

Officer Barry, with his left hand, began shooting, but his aim was poor. Officers Franz and Shea and ex-sheriff Carson joined in pursuit, following the fugitives and keeping up rapid firing. Farrall was finally brought down by a shot through the breast. He gained his feet, and was again shot, and gave up only when he could no longer fight.

He deserves small trust who is not privy counselor to himself.

A wise man should have money in his head, not in his heart.

Agreeably Surprised.

"I had a very severe cold on my lungs that caused much soreness and gave me considerable uneasiness in regard to the result," says Mr. T. R. Smith, of Billerica, Mass. "A local druggist called my attention to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and on his recommendation I gave the remedy a careful trial. The result surprised me; 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by J.
