of Secretary of State, John Sherman has largely passed out of public view, but he is still a resident of Washington. When asked the other day what he thought of Admiral Dewey as a nominee for the Presidency, Mr. Sherman said: "You must remember that I am a good Republican, and certainly I do not want to say anything that might embarrass my party. A man to be successful in a race for the Presidency must know hw t manage men. Of course, he is the hero of the times and popular sentiment would run in his favor as it did to Grant. be a strong candidate. The argument that Dewey is not schooled in statecraft has little weight in his disfavor. He has displayed great firmness of character, a wonderful degree of selfconfidence, and he is a man, I should say, who is well fitted to deal with difficult and perplexing problems." The President's conference with Admiral Dewey, before he left for the West, reslied in orders being issued at once for increasing the naval force now engaged in maintaining what is a practical blockade of the Philippines, by several more vessels, including the Brooklyn. It has been openly stated in Washington for some time past, that a thriving trade was being carried on with insurgent ports, and it has even been hinted that some of the officials over there were deriving considerable profit from conniving at its continuance. Whether the latter be true or not, it is not easy to understand why the additional vessels were not sent some time ago if they were needed. The incident, however, shows how inxious the administration is to iden tify itself in the popular mind with carrying out Admiral Dewey's wishes with regard to the Philippines, as there is no doubt that the people generally, have almost implicit confidence in the Admiral's judgment.
