the bad odors and disagreeable smells which frequently greet our citizens in passing down Fayetteville and other streets adjoining the Market House. The Market House will probably be sold to a syndicate who will erect on the site a modern building, which will improve very materially the part of the city.

We recognize the fact that the site is a very valuable one, and as the Board always looks very carefully after the interest of the city, we believe that it should be disposed of at public auction, giving every one a chance to bid on it, and that in order to guarantee that a good price shall be obtained for the building, we recommend, as stated above, that the minimum price be fixed at $50,000, and all of which is respectfully submitted.

A DEAD MAN WHO ESCAPED

Case Similar to the Ghost Seen in Country Graveyard. Some one has brought a negro boy to the attention of the police who has discovered a dead man lying on the ground in the western part of the town.

The boy says that he and a companion saw a man on the ground on the edge of a farm house yard, as they were going about 12 o'clock Saturday night, and that he had just come by the same place and had seen the body under a coffin.

The other reported to the police that the dead man had walked off and was nowhere to be seen. The boy then confessed that he might have been mistaken about seeing him under the coffin that morning, but insisted that there could be no mistake about the night before.

As the boys were on their way to the graveyard, they saw a man who is entirely possible that he saw nothing or a shadow at all.

The Greensboro Evening Telegram says: A full century of our once upon a time was being done and at night all was a lonely road near a country church and graveyard.

Among the special mentions he noticed a white object rise out of the ground and then a shape came into the earth again. The figure did not go far before his horse came to him again and he dismounted and his horse and went back to the house again. As he retraced his steps he saw at intervals the same white object leap up out of the ground and disappear as before.
