was ever dominated before by one man may be convincing proof of his power over the party as at present constituted. As the dictator of the policies and candidates of the national Democracy he is without a rival, but the dictator is not always acceptable to the American people, and Mr. Bryan's "vindication" may prove the most costly blunder in his political career. Like the charge at Balaclava, "it is magnificent, but it is not war."

Norfolk Ledger (Ind.): "Whatever differences of opinion may have prevailed in the Democratic Convention at Kansas City as to the matter of platform, the tremendous enthusiasm that greeted the fact that all were of one mind as to the man who should carry the banner in the coming fight for control of the Executive branch of the General Government. It was plain that the electric effect of the young Nebraskan upon the convention of four years ago had not spent itself in the least during the time that had elapsed since then, and the wild applause that greeted his nomination, and lasted nearly half an hour, leaves no room to doubt that he is the idol of his party. No man since the foundation of the Government ever reached, in so short a time, the height of popular admiration in his political household as did Mr. Bryan, and the secret of his remarkable career is no doubt partly explained, at least, in the tribute paid to him by ex-Senator Hill, of New York, in seconding the nomination—when he pictured Mr. Bryan as "the champion of the plain people and of the workingman." That he has the good of the masses at heart there can be no doubt, and when that can be said of a man no higher tribute feated candidate he has some historic precedents to encourage him and his party—those of Jefferson and Jackson, who, after going down in defeat when first standing for election to the high office of Chief Executive of the nation, came again at the next quadrennial battle of the ballots and carried off the honor. Then, too, Mr. Cleveland stood the second time after a failure—although the conditions were not exactly similar to the others named—and he also saw victory perch upon the banner that just four years before he had carried to defeat. So there is nothing in the result of 1896 to dampen the ardor of the Democracy's present fight.

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE PAST.

I. In times of old when we were together. We toiled and played in the beautiful weather. We pondered the lessons that knowledge had bought. We worked on the lessons nature had taught.
II. "Oh, bright happy hours that have passed away." We count you no more in the peaceful days. No more do we see you and your beautiful sun. That melted our hearts together as one.
III. No more the bright face of one in our midst. Who's now in glory and rest and bliss. "Oh, happy thought," that we can say.
IV. "We were as one at school and play."
V. No more do we hear the old drum song. "Come boys, young men, hard work today." Some men did heed the call of the drum. And some will fall when the work is done.
VI. Oh, happy days we once enjoyed. As school mates and friends and student boys. Oh, time couldst thou recall those days again. That made us boys as friendly men.
VII. But now the time has come and gone. And we can't help the loss of one. Who bright and smiling stood with us one day. When enthralled in the tomb the next he lay.
VIII. Oh, Time, you're gone and you will not come. At the call of ten, nor the call of one. Some sweet day we hope to see. Those sweet days roll back into eternity.

THE UNHIDDEN GUEST.
I made a feast in my banquet hall; The guests were choice and few; There was Success with his splendid eyes, And Health with his ruddy hue; And there was Joy with her radiant smile, And Love with her lily breast; And I said: "We five will eat and drink— There shall be no other guest." I set five plates upon the board, With fairest frills o'erspread; When suddenly a sixth appeared, Heated high with bitter bread. I set five glasses on the board, And poured in them the wine; When suddenly a sixth appeared Filled full of tears and brine. I placed five wreaths upon the board, Rose-tinted like June morns; When suddenly a sixth appeared, Enwrought with naked thorns. Then gay we sat in the banquet hall, With merry laugh and jest; While at my side unsmiling stood The uninvited guest. Oh, lightly, lightly flowed the talk, And laughter rang again; Yet louder sounded in my heart The speechlessness of Pain. —E. Wetherald, in New England Magazine.
