TURKEY SALE.

It has been decided to load a car of turkeys and other poultry at Hayesville on Monday and Tuesday, November 19th and 20th.

The farmers should make a special effort to get their turkeys as fat as possible. One buyer advises that all turkeys weighing less than eight pounds be held and grown out until the Christmas sale.

Bringing a poultry car to Hayesville should enable the farmers to get better prices for their turkeys and other poultry. No doubt they will cooperate to make it a successful sale by bringing all surplus turkeys to the car.

The man that buys for the car will not buy at Hayesville on November 13th.

The House That Eggs Built

Out in California at the Los Angeles County Fair there was an exhibit of a little house built of eggs. Whoever arranged the exhibit must have heard about W. L. Shrank, of Hamilton County, Texas, whose profits from poultry have enabled him to build and completely furnish a comfortable and beautiful home which he calls "the house that eggs built." After trying for a number of years to get enough ahead out of his cotton crop to build a home, Mr. Schrank decided to try a few chickens. Nowadays, he sells an average of a crate of eggs a day, has two Jersey cows, fifty sheep, a flock of turkeys, about 400 White Leghorn hens and rents 60 acres to a tenant who is required to raise all the feed he uses. He has set an example that is being followed by 36 of the 42 homes in his community, each of which now has from 200 to 500 hens.

Mr. Schrank is just one of many Southern farmers who have found that poultry, when well managed, will bring returns at least double those of any other farm crop, considering the investment. It is an easy matter to secure a net profit of $100 to $300 a year from 100 good hens. All over the South, poultry is building homes, paying grocery and doctor bills, clothing families, educating children, installing water-works and lights, and providing regular incomes sufficient to meet expenses as they are incurred.

George Weathers, of Bowman, S. C., started five years ago with four hens and a rooster. He now has 450 White Leghorns and is getting 250 to 260 eggs daily. W. H. Clough of Pierce County, Georgia, has been in the poultry business seven years. He can't begin to count his chickens—he has to measure them by the acre. Mr. Clough doesn't keep as many records as some folks but his business keeps on growing and he says his bank account shows the balance on the right side, so he is pretty well satisfied. Incidentally, he raises a bale of cotton to the acre and corn that will yield around 40 bushels.

Poultry brings upward of two million dollars annually to the citizens of Greene County, Tennessee, whose flocks range from a few dozen birds per farm up into the thousands, with a net income per hen of around $2.00. The 90 White Leghorn hens owned by Mrs. H. T. Moore, of Kerrville, Tenn., averaged 112.4 eggs per hen and made their a net profit of $241.75 during the first six months of 1928.

Turkeys and guineas can also be raised profitably on practically every Southern farm. For the Thanksgiving and Christmas markets, of 1927, the Black Belt of Alabama sold 31 carloads of turkeys for $120,000. Along about this time of the year, Mrs. Oscar Duke, who lives near Griffin, Georgia, can step out in the back yard and count at least 100 beautiful Bourbon turkeys, for which she has no trouble getting from two and a half to five dollars a piece. The guinea fowl used to be considered more of a curiosity than anything else but that idea has changed, and there is a growing demand for guinea broilers at prices that show the grower a mighty nice profit.
