Carolinas' Gas Status Is Serious

Charlotte, Feb. 3.—L. W. Driscoll, ORA district manager here, said today the gasoline and fuel oil situation in the Carolinas was critical.

Not a single tank car of gasoline now is being shipped into either state, he reported.

Some sections of North Carolina, which depend on kerosene for cooking, he added, are entirely out of supplies. What gasoline being received is from the Plantation Pipe Line, it was explained by Petroleum products dealers here.

"You can't get around it, it is a definite fact that our gasoline supply is not being replenished," said Driscoll. "We have an adequate supply for the immediate present—what gasoline we have, we have, but evidently we are not going to get much more any time soon. This fuel oil problem must be met first as far as possible. Right here in Charlotte as well as elsewhere everybody must realize the extreme importance of conserving gasoline."
