LOVE AT FIRST FLIGHT

CHAPTER VII

Barred from the Navy's V-7 program because he lacked two years of college math, Lester Dowd tries to enlist in the Coast Guard but is turned down because of a "facial squint." The doctor refuses even to examine him. Commander Whitman, an old friend of the family, endeavors to get a waiver for Lester so he can join the V-7, but after weeks of waiting Lester learns they still insist on two years of college math. He is successful in joining the V-5 Naval Aviation and is sent to Anacostia Naval Base. After making his first solo flight he gets a three-day furlough and visits his folks in Chicago.

Mr. Raymonde turned, raised one hand and waggled his fingers "I visualizel him framed in the second arch of the sundial, leaning against the stonework, chrysanthemums banked behind. His young face buried in a copy of Jane's Fighting Ships."

There was a moment of stunned

Mother recovered first. "Oh, really," she said in a childlike voice as if she had just seen angels "How nee, how terriby?

"We'll call it 'I Must GO DOWN To The Sea Again," suggested Father.

After much bickering we compromised on several sullen poses in the library. Mr. Raymonde, deprived of the garden, capitalized on maps, shadows, and gestures, extracting atmosphere like juice from the props on hand.

"I am more than a photographer," he avowed at the end of the ordeal. Nobody doubted that for a minute.

a minute.

I started upstairs to change from my uniform into a pair of tattered flannels, a shirt, and a sweater, anticipating mufti like an old man looking forward to his rocking chair. Before I had taken two steps Mother came over to the banister and commenced.

"Lester," she started, "I don't ask much, do 1?"

"Lester," she started, "I don't ask much, do 1?"

'Now, there is a silly question."

'I mean you don't think of me as the typical demandining mother, do you?" she persisted.

"No, dear, you've been more like a foreman to me," I said devotedly.

"Do me a favor, will you?" she asked, dropping all sham. "I promised Mrs. Prentiss, Mrs. Bishop, Mrs. Brooks and Mrs. that you'd go to see them this af ternoon. Will you do it "
"Don't forget anybody," I said and started up stairs again.
"That's sweet, and in your uniform," she instructed.

I stopped. "In my uniform!" moaned.

"You can't take it off," she said sternly, pointing an accusing finger at me. "Don't tell me. "I

'Nobody will care.'

"Nobody will care."

"If you go to see those people, I won't talk," she bribed.

"All right. What'll I do, ring the bell and tell them I'm working my way through the Navy selling magazine subscriptions?"

They all expect you. They simply want to look at you."

"If you hired a float, we could make scheduled trips around market Square?" I proposed in defeat.

Mother laughed.

"It's wonderful to be at home" I called sourly from my room.

Lestun Bowd. He's being an avaituh, you know."

Well, she might have got the same effect if she had tossed a glittery constellation of stars on the carpet and announced wanly from the divan, "That's the Big Dippuh."

The room was filled with the shrill high pitched racket of excited female conversation. I was passed around after the sugar cookies and scrutinized like the coicest article at a Grenfell Sale usy chatter flowed on all sides. "Is that Florence bowd's boy?"

"Yes, and this has done him more good."

"Lester," said Mrs. Troy, slowly feeling her way, "your eyes are brighter."

"Thank you," I murmured. No

'Thank you,' I murmured. No-body knows what I went through with those cloudy eyes. "And your shoulders are straighter." Thus Mrs. Wright spoke. She seemed to remember me hobbling about like the jong-leur of Notre Dame. I hunted methods to destroy the insinuated rebirth, but time is a skipping thing, and if the hamlet chooses to hail you home as a regenerate Prince Hal, who as a regenerate Frince Hai, who are you against such numbers? I was well aware, however of the unpayable debt I owed the designer of the cadet's blue serge uniform with its one lone star. I never could have scaled such neights in tweeds.

Her ranking position on the Committee for tats and greases and the duties entailed kept me and the duties entailed kept me from seeing Miss Winward until next evening. I came over after dinner and round her alone before a noisy fire knitting something blue and shapeless. A pair of glasses were pushed back on her head, where they were of questionable value. Her blouse, sweater and skirt were all slightly displaced by the fury of her knitting but somehow it all blended in a fancy dissaray. She was so absorbed in her labors she did not notice me enter.

"Whose what will that warm?" I asked from the door.

"Whose what will that warm?" I asked from the door.

"Lester!" she cried, jumping up and coming at me like a picador with the anonymous drygoods still impaled on the needles.

"You'd better put those knives in," I cautioned.

"In glad to see you," she in my ear. "I'm sorry was in't at the City Hall to weld in the work in the committee," she apologized.

"I was downstairs with the committee," she apologized.

"The executive type," I said, pulling the glasses down from her eyes. "How was it downstate?"

"Fat and Greasy," she laughed pushing the glasses back up again. "How did you ever come by the Committee?" I asked as she started for the sofa.

"It's the only way you can see anybody now. Sit here."

"How do you like working with the girls?"

Miss Winward, totally unaware that an attempt was underway to strike at the soft underbelly of romance, stood up suddeynl and began to divulge accumulated thought.

"Lester," she said, "I've been thinking that you and I ought to have a relationship."

"If you'd sat still for another two seconds there'd be no necessity for long range planning.

"Good night," she agreed promptly. "See you tomorrow."
At home later I telephoned the airport and inquired about my ticket to Corpus Christi. It was best to be sure of space. Everybody was traveling.

body was traveling.

A newsboy was standing by the plane's exit ramp. He was selling copies of the Corpus Christi Callcopies of the Corpus Christi Caller Times to disembarking passengers. A front page story told how a gentleman named Cowboy Henry had plugged another gentleman out a ways by Six Points. An attendant by the gate, I observed, had strapped a twenty-two revolver to his waist. Texas, it seemed was still Texas. only the calibre was slightly reduced.

The day was warm, almist hot, and I unbuttoned my coat.

"Is it always like this?" I asked "The weather don't change much down here," allowed a native.
