CHAPTER XIII

"But we just can't expect to get clean away!" Laura protested. "No, I don't expect that," Jerry said.

As Jerry and Laura flew on in their stolen German Messerschmitt, Jerry considered the chances that they and the ambulance plane could get through safely. "I don't think we can expect to get clean away without some sort of show by the Germans," he said, "but there will be no clouds of fighters after us. After all, that observation pilot didn't see our American plane on the field, and so the message he radioed before he was killed couldn't have been about that. He merely said something that made the Germans suspicious enough to send the two fighter planes to investigate. And the men in those planes probably didn't get any radio message through before they were shot. The only ones who knew about our takeoff are those German soldiers who came down the hill to the field. They probably have no radio with them and will have to get back to their command post before a message can be sent. That will take time."

"I suppose you're right," Laura said. "But when a message does get through, the Germans will probably send a few fighters to try to pick us off farther south." Jerry went on. "However, it won't take us more than an hour and a half to reach the French coast and, when we do, we can radio our report. They fell silent keeping a sharp lookout for the ambulance plane. Their German fighter was so much faster than the big transport that they knew they should catch up soon. And they did. It wasn't long before they saw the transport ahead."

In a few minutes more they were not only close behind the American plane, but were talking to Blaiston on the radio. "Good to know it's you," Blaiston said. "I've seen you for a while now and I thought you were a German sent out to get us."

"In about three-quarters of an hour," Jerry said, "if we don't meet any difficulties before then, we'll be close enough to the coast to get in touch with the field in Italy. Tell them to send fighters to help us in, and be sure to tell them to lay off the Messerschmitts and I am in!"

"I've already done it," Blaiston replied. "Told them about sending some planes to escort us in, that is. Figured that, even if the Germans intercepted my message, they wouldn't learn the story much sooner than they'd know anyway."

"Guess you're right," Jerry said. "Did you get through all right?" "Sure—talked to a lad who seems to know you," Blaiston replied. "Name's Beston."

"Bob Beston?" Jerry exclaimed. "Was he at the Italian Base?" "That's right," Blaiston replied. "And he's been a little worried about you and the young lady, it seems. I'll get in touch with him again and tell him you're okay and have stolen a nice German plane for him."

They sped on, mile after mile over what seemed to be peaceful French countryside, without anything happening.

After half an hour, Laura began to feel that they would get through without a fight. "I can't believe it, though, Jerry," she said.

"Don't believe it," he answered. "They'll be out after us pery now. Keep your eyes peeled. I've got to get the tail of the big plane. They've got guns everywhere, but nothing there."

"Can't I do something?" Laura asked. "Aren't there more guns on this plane besides those in the nose and wings?"

"There's an observer's seat behind," Jerry said. And I think here's a turret there. Go back and see."

Laura crawled back and found a little seat with a turret containing a double machine gun. She reported her find to Jerry.

"Good!" he said. "You'd better take up your post back there. Best place for looking for planes, anyway. Can you figure out how to handle the gun?"

"I think so," Laura said, and went to take up her new position. Then, looking up through the plexiglass turret top, she saw 3 German planes above them and to the east. She called to Jerry at once, and he zoomed the plane up a bit so he could get a look at them. They were three German Messerschmitts like his own and they were heading north some miles to the east.

"So they sent up three of 'em for us," he muttered. "But the three planes did not come at them. Instead they veered slightly and circled above the American plane and its follower. If they were just three fighters on a routine flight, Jerry decided, they might not have heard anything about an American ambulance plane and a stolen German Messerschmitt."

"After all, they don't know an American pilot is flying this plane he argued with himself. "When they see a German plane in this neck of the woods, it will never occur to them to think it is not flown by a German. Maybe they'll figure that I'm escorting this captured American transport composed of his wife and five of his eight children. The entire meeting and entertainment was held in the large yard at his home and the host had provided comfortable chairs for all the ladies as well as the men who desired seats. The entire arrangement was such that everyone could see and hear every thing that was said or done as it had the entire yard wired with electric lights.

In order that there be no lack of material for the inner man, Mr. Beam had provided and had on hand a large truck load of cold watermelons so that whatever number of amount that may have been necessary to more than adequately fill all present, he kept cutting melons as long as the people would eat—and did they eat, some eat as many as four and five large slices. No one present will soon forget the most cordial hospitality of Mr. W. Blaine Beam and his good family.

News Of The First Methodist Church

The pulpit was occupied Sunday morning by the Rev. Leighton Harrell who preached on "The Respectable Son." He pointed out that many of those in the church are like the son who stayed home in the story of the Prodigal Son. As long as things in the church go to suit the members they are satisfied, but they get upset and indignant when anyone threatens their position. They try to make the church a social club instead of making it an institution that serves the community in which it is located.

Sunday night Mr. Harrell preached at the Union service at the Second Baptist Church. The topic of his sermon was "blindness." Before the preaching service the Young People from the various churches in town met together for an hour of worship and fellowship. All four denominations were well represented at this meeting.

Dr. J. D. Rudisill, 49, owner and surgeon of the Caldwell Hospital in Lenoir, and for a number of years a practicing physician in Cherryville, died suddenly on Saturday afternoon at his cabin at Edgemont. He was esteemed one of the outstanding surgeons of North Carolina.

Only recently Dr. Rudisill had been appointed to the North Carolina Board of Conservation and his election by Governor Cherry.

He was the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Henry Rudisill of Lincolnton, where he was born July 9, 1896.

He practiced medicine in Cherryville before going to Lenoir in 1926 to practice with Dr. Petree there. In 1933, Dr. Rudisill became connected with the Caldwell Hospital. He was a co-founder of this institution some years before that time, but continued to practice medicine in Cherryville.

Dr. Rudisill was a veteran of World War One, and in World War Two was serving as examining physician for the Caldwell county draft board.

He was a graduate of Lenoir-Rhyne College and the University of Maryland, where he received his M. D. degree. He was a fellow of the American College of Surgeons.

Surviving are a brother, Henry Ashier of a Lincolnton bank; three sisters, Mrs. J. C. Lore of Mississippi, Mrs. Nell Rudisill of Lenoir, and Mrs. Bryant Lawing of Lincolnton.

field to the other on their knees, no horses, no plows, etc. The transportation is done on wagons small of course, pulled by men, boys and girls alike. Harrowing of the ground is done by two people pulling one section of the harrow. There is one thing I might say though. Germany as a whole has wonderful land and is very pretty country, and most every house is of good quality but now they are flat.

I have seen many wounded, dead and buried if you are interested in knowing about that. I have seen the dead hauled from the battlefield by the truck load but they were all cared for in good manner, certainly as well or better than one could expect. Every grave possible is marked and in many cases decorated with flowers, placed there by civilians. They seem to each (civilians) feel a grave to care for.

Now Annie Mae I have told you few things and if it's censored probably some will be cut out, but all these things have been published, and I've been there and seen lots of it.

How are all of you, write when you can. Best regards to all.

Your brother, EARL

Letters from Soldiers 19 July 1945

Dear Fred, Am on my way to England for to begin at the Army University in Shrivenham. The school will be run on the basis of 2 regular University and will last for eight weeks, beginning about the first of August. After completing the course I will be coming home, so I have enough points for discharge; then I may be able to continue in college there in the U. S. A.

When I was in England before I didn't get around but very little as the "Battle of the Bulge" broke out and I was returned to France then to Belgium. It may be this time I can go to London and visit visit there - also other places of interest.

In the meantime please send my Eagle to the following address: T-5 John W. Beam 5417177 Army University Center No. 1 Shrivenham, England. c/o P O 756, New York, N. Y.

Thank you. May God bless you all. A friend, J. W. BEAM.

Mrs. Dean Houser has received the following letter from S-Sgt. C. E. Brown. 20 June 45

Dear Annie Mae and All: Tonight I am fine as always and thinking of you back home. I received your V-mail recently and am glad you received another of the boxes I sent. You still have not received either of the ones with snoutguns or German rifles. I have sent about 8 or 10 to you, Guy and Clyde, and some of them are really nice. I am anxious to hear of your receiving them also.

The last one I sent had a part of a German parachute in it, also a winter cap of mine along with other various items. I am glad you don't mind saving them for me. Now, you would like for me to tell you more of various things, yes we went through some pretty rough battles. All the way through France, Belgium, Holland and Germany. We were right along with General Patton, 3rd Army through France. One daring instance or time was when the Germans counter attacked at Avronches, France. We were in the Brest area of France delivering gasoline and upon returning all the trucks were cut off and couldn't get back to our area. The burning town we went through weren't very comfortable with two thousand gallons of gasoline behind. Sometimes the flame was only 20 feet from our tanks. Then we came on through Holland, being attached to the 9th Army and it was rough over the Ithine River, plenty activity and all the destruction one can imagine. The snipers were still at large and one really had to be on his guard if he wanted to live. Along the way Germans were lying dead and equipment was enormous destroyed. We advance as far as Hannover Germany right behind the combat units. I remember one brutal thing. The Germans mass murdered five hundred allied and force laborers and just threw them all in a hole together and while we were there the German civilians were ordered to take their bodies up and then the whole area of civilians were ordered out to see the remains and were shown the cruelty that had been exercised by their own people.

Just before V-E Day we captured three German planes with the crew, and really they were glad to be taken. They were scared of everything, they knew they were licked and they had no place to go to escape punishment or being captured.

Then on Victory Day two more planes landed on our field and surrendered. We were having a party and it was broken up for a few minutes. The parachute sisk I sent in last box was taken from the plane we captured. The whole of Germany is finished. I might say the towns are flat, the equipment is destroyed and the people, many of them are homeless. For the next ten years they will learn what war has done and for the next fifty years they will be rebuilding what has been destroyed and much will never be restored.

The German people have been blind. Many don't know what goes on, near by in home town or
