PASTURE SEEDING
 Farmer friends, let me remind you that the spring pasture seeding season is just around the corner and perhaps you may be able to sow the grass that old man weather would not let you get in last fall. Although we will have to admit that the spring seeding season is second choice to the sowing season in the Fall. In many cases, however, it is very successful, and there are times when we have to do things when we can. Some farmers report that they like the spring season ever better. Let me remind you also that good pastures are the basis for any successful and profitable livestock enterprise. Farmers who provide at least 1-2 to 2 acres of good permanent and 1-2 acre of supplementary pasture per cow report that their feeding worries are pretty well solved if the forage during surplus periods is taken care of in the form of silage or hay. Of course, there is always that element of the weather and many of our farmers have had discouraging results these past three years with your pastures. We hope as always that this will not continue but that is the chance we have to take to be farmers.
 Suppose we get into the different classes of livestock and see what we think is best for each. For dairy cattle we will recommend Ladino Clover - Orchard Grass mixture sowed at the rate of 2 to 2 1/2 pounds of clover and 10 to 15 pounds of grass. Admitting that orchard grass does not grow as late in the fall nor as much in dry weather, we still have to recommend it because dairy cows eat it much better than they do clover-fescue mixtures. It is not a bad idea to have some clover-fescue pasture fenced off where the cows can be isolated on it just in case it is needed. For dairy cows at least, 1-2 acres should be provided per cow and 1 acre for each heifer over 9 months old.
 For beef cattle, two acres of well fertilized Ladino - grass pasture per cow will provide the basic feed requirements. Ladino-Tall Fescue mixture can be highly recommended for beef cattle as they eat it well and it seems to grow very good in this area even better than Clover-Orchard grass in many cases.
 Supplemental grazing for dairy and beef cattle should consist of lespedeza, small grains, kudzu, sudan grass, crimson clover and alfalfa provided at the rate of 1-2 acre per cow. Contrary to popular belief alfalfa can be grazed without hurting the stand too much if the cows are put on it about the time it is ready to cut for hay and taken off as soon as it is eaten down. Cattle should be kept off until the alfalfa begins to bloom again.
 Even though hogs are not primarily roughage consuming animals, good pastures will save a large portion of the feed bill and frequently make the difference between profit and loss on the swine enterprise. In addition to their value as feed, pastures, properly rotated, are an important part of an effective sanitation program. The legumes, particularly Ladino clover and alfalfa, are excellent swine pasture crops. Temporary pastures of small grains, crimson clover, rape, sudan grass and soybeans should be used when other pastures are not growing. For a sow and 2 litters of pigs you should have 1-2 acres of permanent pasture and 1-2 acre of temporary pasture for the year.

 Good pastures provide the best diet at the cheapest cost for a flock of breeding sheep. If green pasture can be at the rate of 4-10 acre per ewe the year around, it will provide all or nearly all of the feed required for the production of fat market lambs. If properly managed, sheep will aid in controlling the weeds in pastures, and they do not damage pastures for other classes of livestock. Sheep and cattle are a very good combination to run together.
 The dry summers we have had has brought forth much interest in the old stand-by Ladino grass. Ladino grass is rated fair and does grow fairly well in dry weather, better than some of the other grasses. It can be seeded with Ladino clover, but seeding must be in the spring. In many cases a stand is quite hard to establish because all the seed do not germinate the same year and those that do come up are slow growing early in the spring. Ladino grass contains less nutrients than orchard and fescue grasses and will produce less forage. We cannot recommend this grass too highly because of its limitations. We are sure that you could do better normally. Seeding rates for Ladino grass is from 12-15 pounds per acre and the best seeding time is early March for this area. On areas where Ladino grass is established, it will no doubt pay you to keep it.
 Dry weather has brought another grass into the limelight the past year or so. Coastal Bermuda grass is easily established but difficult to eradicate. It does make a good pasture when grown with Dixie Crimson Clover. Coastal Bermuda must be propagated by vegetative cuttings because it has few or no seed. The most common way is to set rootstocks in foot rows, 4 feet apart in the rows. This requires about 3,000 sprigs per acre. April and May are the best months to plant Bermuda, but it can be planted in the fall or winter if stocks are planted deep enough to keep them from freezing. When planting in spring use 400 pounds of 8-8-8 fertilizer per acre in the row. Overseed the first fall with 20 pounds of Dixie Crimson Clover using 500 pounds of 0-14-14 or equivalent each fall. Without Crimson Clover use 500 pounds of 0-14-14 plus 50 to 100 pounds of nitrogen again in June. No nitrogen is necessary when grown with Crimson clover.
 A good pasture program based on enough, well fertilized Ladino-grass mixtures with ample supplementary grazing will give us most of the grazing we need in a normal season, however, it is not a bad idea to explore and have some of the others available for abnormal seasons like we have been having.
