Self-Help Features Develop The Child

Learning how to dress himself will develop a child's muscle coordination, initiative and self reliance. But to help the child learn to dress himself, select those clothes which have self-help features, advises Julia McIver, State College extension specialist in textiles and clothing.

All openings, for example, should be in the same place—in the center front. This avoids confusion, especially among younger children. Miss McIver adds that it's good to have a front opening that's the full length of the garment, or at least one that's deep enough to go easily over the head.

In selecting clothing, choose those which have few and easy-to-manage fastenings. Round, flat buttons about an inch in diameter are much easier for the small child to manage. Miss McIver also advises using a guard under the zipper and a tassel or ball button on the slide for easy grasping.

You may find it good practice, too, to mark the front of the garment with colored thread. If possible, avoid centerback fastenings since this is the most difficult place for a child to reach. Avoid very small or too large buttons, hooks and eyes, and snap fasteners. Separate belts are a nuisance for the very small child, and sashes on everyday dresses are an unnecessary worry, according to Miss McIver.

Let the child's clothing be simple and yet enough like that worn by his friends so that he won't feel apart from the group. Be sure that the clothes fit the child—clothes that are too large or too small will make him self-conscious and shy.

If a car wheel is out of balance 1 oz. at tread, the imbalance increases to 11 lbs. at 60 mph.

Social Security Is Extended To Many

Since January 1st of this year social security coverage has been extended to many additional thousands of domestic workers, it was pointed out today by Mr. Joseph P. Walsh, District Manager of the Gastonia social security office.

Mr. Walsh went on to explain that one of the important changes provided for in the 1954 amendments to the social security law brought under social security coverage any worker in a private home who is paid cash wages of at least $50.00 by his employer in any one calendar quarter.

These new regulations went into effect on January 1, 1955, and they mean that nearly all cooks, maids, gardeners and other household workers will now be able to build up the same type of old-age and survivors insurance protection which workers in industry have had in the past.

"Some domestic workers," Mr. Walsh stated, "have been covered by social security in the past four years, but only if they worked for their employer on at least 24 days in a calendar quarter and were paid at least $50.00 cash in that quarter by the employer. Beginning January 1, 1955, the 24 day requirement was dropped, and now any such worker who is paid at least $50.00 cash by an employer in a three month calendar quarter must be reported for social security purposes."

Both the household employer and the worker have important responsibilities in seeing that the worker's wages are reported for social security. The worker must obtain a social security number. An application may be obtained at the nearest social security office or his local post office. When he receives his number, he should show it to the employer for her to copy down on her records. The household employer needs to obtain an employer identification number from the Internal Revenue Service. She can get this either by writing directly to the Internal Revenue Service director at Greensboro, N. C., or by asking her social security office for the booklet OASI-21 which contains an application blank for the employer number.

Mr. Walsh explained that the Internal Revenue Service will mail reporting forms to the employer at the end of each calendar quarter. The employer sends in the report form, showing the name and account number of the worker and the amount of cash wages paid during the calendar quarter, together with the social security tax due. A report is now due covering wages paid during July, August and September. This report must be filed on or before October 31.

The tax rate is 4 percent of the worker's total wages. The employer deducts 2 percent from the worker's wages each payday, adds another 2 percent, and then sends in the entire 4 percent with her quarterly tax return. These tax payments are the first step in insuring that the household worker will be able to build up old-age and survivors insurance protection under the social security law.
