letter appears the most elaborate biography of Brown that has yet been written. It is by Oswald Gar-rison Villard, a grandson of William Lloyd Garrison, and it will do much to justify Mrs. Robinson, although Villard, without attempting to gloss the grim old man's faults concludes that Brown wrought according to his lights, and that he died the death of a martyr for conscience sake.

Mrs. Robinson may be too hard on Brown, but even so, Mr. Villard is too easy. John Brown's career car be excused only upon the ground that he was insane. He was not in any sense of the word a Common-wealth builder, and he had no con-ception whatever of civic duty. Moreover the murders, he commit ted or that were committed under his direction upon the Pottawatomie were without justification. Historians have never attempted to justify them. Mr. Villard makes no attempt. Let the invasion of Virattempt. Let the invasion of Vir-ginia be dignified with the name of insurrection, and accept that as an excuse for homicides incident to the abortive uprising and even the abortive uprising and even then apologies for Brown have nothing whereupon to hang an eulogy. He has been commended for rare personal courage, but surely physical daring, standing alone, is not suffi-cient cause for canonication cient cause for canonization. The Unemployed.

One of the world's great problems has been, is, and probably always will be, what to do with the unemployed, how to change their condi-tion, in what way to ameliorate their situation. A great subdivision of this question, although usually unrecognized, becomes purely mental; it relates to people in theoretically comfortable circumstances, and ap-plies to women rather than to men. George Eliot, with her charity of vision, has written in one novel that "a loving woman's world lies within the four walls of her own house," and that round of daily tasks prevents any notice of the outside gloomy wetness; in another, "You'll never be low when you've got a dairy."
