FALLS 3,000 FEET AND LANDS ON A ROOF IN LONDON

A young Liverpool member of the royal flying corps, who is now in training somewhere in England, came unscathed, except for a bruise or two, from a thrilling experience when his machine fell from a height of 3,000 feet on a house in a populous part of London. He tells of his feelings during the descent at the rate of 1,000 feet a minute as follows:

"I was leading a reconnaissance flight and had to go up to 3,000 feet, when I signaled to the others following by firing a pistol. The pistol exploded and hit me on the head and broke my propeller, and the back of the engine caught fire. Both controls were cut away, so I only had the elevator control left and could not guide her.

"The broken propeller tore a large hole in the plane. It was very windy and damp, and the wind carried me up toward London, dropping me about a 1,000 feet every minute. I shut my eyes and dropped and landed half on a house and half in a little alley. I was covered with petrol and got an awful knock on the head and was dazed when I hit the ground. My right wing went through a window, and the whole machine was smashed.

"When I crawled out with my head in my hands, the first thing the lady of the house said was, 'What on earth are you doing here?' So I said, 'I've come for tea.' She said, 'You've killed one of my chickens.' The machine was a wreck.

"It was a nasty feeling, as I had no control, and it was just luck that I did not land on a church steeple."

YOU CAN'T GET FLAT FEET BY BEING HIT ON THE HEAD.

Being bumped on the cranial cavity by a hod full of bricks does not necessarily cause a man to become flat footed, according to the ruling of Deputy Compensation Commissioner W. C. Richards at Syracuse, N. Y.

In the case of William La Grange, who claimed compensation for being struck on the head by said hod of bricks, which blow, he declared, caused him to become flat footed, Commissioner Richards was unable to see the connection between the perihellon of one's dome and the extremity of the nether pedals and dismissed the claim.

99.9 Per Cent Record Perfect Performance of Railroad Rules.

Results of 2,496,504 tests to see how well signals and operating rules were being observed on the Pennsylvania lines east of Pittsburgh showed perfect performance in 99.9 per cent of the cases.

In the period during which these tests were made the statement says, 76,700,000 passengers were carried on the lines east of Pittsburgh, and not a single one was killed in a train accident.
