There is soon to be established in New York city the first diagnostic hospital in this country, which will perform in the highly specialized medicine of today the function of the old family physician of fifty years ago. It will look over a patient suffering from an unidentified ailment, find out what is the matter with him and direct him to a specialist if he can afford it. If not, he will be sent back to the general practitioner under whose care he has been, with a complete diagnosis of his disease, a plan for treating it suggested by competent specialists and references to recent literature on the subject. The New York Diagnostic society is planning the new institution. There are about 300 physicians and surgeons among the associate members and almost as many lay members. About $100,000 has already been raised by the building fund committee, and only $50,000 is still required to complete the sum needed for buildings and grounds, which will be in a central part of Manhattan. It is hoped that the institution will be self supporting, and Dr. M. Joseph Mandelbaum, president of the society, has worked out a plan of installment payments which he thinks will bring about this result. "I know this will appear startling," he said recently, "to those who are not in the habit of looking at these matters from the standpoint of dollars and cents. But this is a practical plan and therefore must be considered from the most easily applied financial basis. This method of payment will be especially for those who are wage earners, whereby if their application for diagnostic services is approved by their employers or others equally responsible a method of small periodic payments will secure for them the very best diagnostic skill." The need for such an institution was first pointed out by Dr. Charles H. Mayo in an address before the Catholic Hospital association at Milwaukee. Dr. Mayo expressed the opinion that the one great present day need in the direction of hospital advancement was a hospital devoted exclusively to diagnosis.
