"In conversation with a representative today, I could not help expressing my feeling of gratitude at the good your medicine had done for me. For three long years I suffered untold agony with what they said was a severe case of Rheumatism. After the best Doctors had exhausted their knowledge in regard to my case, I consulted an Osteopath and after an examination he said the hip joint had become irritated and it would take a long time to cure it. If it could be cured at all, I felt so discouraged over my condition, for I had spent hundreds of dollars in the vain pursuit of ease, for my suffering was terrible.

bottles, thinking that if I took it at all, I would go at it right. And wonderful, yes it is wonderful, the cure it made of me, as my friends can testify. I began to improve on the first bottle and by the time I had finished the course I was a well, strong man and have had no symptoms of the disease since.

I would feel that I had neglected my duty to my fellowmen if I did not tell them of my wonderful cure and I advise any sufferer to give Mrs. Joe Person's Remedy a trial.

DARING EXPLOITS OF GENERAL FUNSTON MADE HIM IDOL OF ARMY AND PUBLIC

Little Red Headed Kansan, Not Knowing Word Fear, Accustomed to Get What He Went After From Time He Graduated Into Long Trousers.

Capture of Aguinaldo, Filipino Chief, Spectacular and Earned Him Promotion to Brigadier General—Wounded Many Times—Life of Adventure.

SINCE the civil war the United States has had no military commander whose fighting qualities and brilliant exploits so endeared him to the people as Major General Fred Funston, the little red headed Kansan, who fought with Gomez against the Spaniards in Cuba and with the Twentieth Kansas volunteers against the Spaniards and the Ladrones in the Philippines.

While Funston gained the greater share of his brilliant fame as a daring soldier by his numerous exploits in the Philippines, his mettle never was more severely tried than in the months after Francisco Villa with his band of cutthroats made the bloody raid upon Columbus, N. M., last March.

Placed in supreme command of the campaign against Villa, with orders to exterminate or disperse the bandit's forces, he nevertheless was so hampered and restricted by the possibility

His roving, adventurous spirit then took him to Mexico, where he sought options on coffee plantations, but he never was keen about business.

Few know that his first work was as a scientist with a bent toward botany. As an agent of the department of agriculture in 1891 he took part in the Death valley expedition; then he explored Alaska and the British northwest and crossed Alaska to the Arctic ocean and traveled from Mackenzie river to Bering sea, a journey of about 3,500 miles.

He camped in the Klondike during the winter of 1893 and then alone floated down the Yukon in a canoe, a journey of hundreds of miles through a wilderness without seeing another living soul. Soon after that he resigned from the department of agriculture and traveled in Mexico.

Funston was in New York in 1896, when the late General Sikes made a

CAPTURE OF FILIPINO CHIEF WON PROMOTION FOR MAJOR FUNSTON

It was the capture of the crafty Aguinaldo that enshrined Fred Funston as hero in the hearts of Americans. It was his campaign against Aguinaldo that won him the rank of brigadier general, and, though by a less sensational route he had attained the rank of major general, the boys who used to hum at his back, charged the Filipino trenches and put the insurgents to flight. Shortly afterward he more than duplicated this exploit, swimming the Rio Grande de la Pampanga with two men under fire and set up a rope ferry by which his troops hauled themselves across the river and delivered a blow that won a battle. For this he was made a brigadier general of volunteers. Major General Otis described him as "the greatest daredevil in the army, a man who would rather fight than eat."

Aguinaldo was foot loose then and a nuisance, as every one remembers. From inaccessible mountain strongholds he sallied out to raid American patrols and burn villages. It was certain that his capture would break the backbone of the revolt, but nobody seemed to know how to reach him. He was hiding in the mountains near the northeast coast of Luzon. It happened that cipher letters sent by Aguinaldo to one of his lieutenants fell into the hands of Lieutenant Taylor of the Twenty-fourth infantry. The letters revealed that Aguinaldo was awaiting re-enforcements at a definite time. Colonel Funston conceived the plan of disguising a force of seventy-nine Filipino scouts as Aguinaldo's expected re-enforcements. At the head of this command and accompanied by four ex-that his activities might precipitate way with the de facto government of Mexico that he was able to move only with the utmost caution and circumspection.

Dispatches to the war department repeatedly carried the indication that he was chafing mightily under the comparative inaction and that he would have been pleased by nothing else so well as being permitted to conduct the campaign in his own decisive fashion. He never placed a great amount of confidence in the good faith of the Carranza military authorities and much better would have liked to dash boldly into the barren fastnesses of the southern republic after Villa regardless of the feelings of Carranza.

A Career of Adventure.

He was sixteen when his father, "Foghorn" Funston, moved from Carlisle to southwestern Kansas. In 1888 young Fred entered the State university of Kansas, where he had for a classmate William Allen White. There was a negro in the college town who started for Funston one day with a gleaming razor. The negro weighed 200 pounds, Funston barely 100. The negro was six feet tall, Funston five feet three inches. In fifteen minutes Funston had the half crazy black man in the lockup and hadn't even mussed his own clothing.

When he left college Funston got a job as city editor of a paper in Fort Smith. It was Democratic. The day before an election the editor in chief left town, and he was temporarily boss. Next day the paper appeared as a red hot Republican sheet, reviling all things Democratic. As a crowd gathered at the front door young Funston retired by the back and from journalism. He explained later that he was weary of newspaper work. "I was tired of a rotten town, a rotten sheet and its rotten politics, and I thought I would wake things up a bit before I left just to show them I was alive."

Always Looked For Action.

His next job was as a conductor on the Santa Fe railroad. A cowpuncher passenger, fired by whisky, shot holes in a car ceiling. Funston took his pistol away and threw him off the train, then stopped the train, ran back along the track and thrashed the gun man.

rousing speech at Madison Square Garden in behalf of the oppressed Cubans. Moved by the appeal for Cuban liberty, Funston offered his services to the Cuban junta, although he knew nothing about military affairs.

The Cubans were glad to have this vigorous youth, and Funston set himself to study the intricacies of twelve pounder Hotchkiss rifles and other things a soldier should know. General Gomez made him second in command to Winchester Dana Osgood, the Cornell football player, who had charge of the insurgent artillery. Funston distinguished himself for bravery at Guimaro in October, 1896, when Osgood was killed. He took command and with a dynamite bomb in his hand led a charge that broke the Spanish front and ended the fight.

Wounded at Bayamo.

At Bayamo he was wounded three times and had his horse killed under him. He was in the thick of the fighting at Las Tunas. After this battle the Cubans insisted on shooting fifty prisoners. Funston protested, was waved aside and promptly resigned his commission. General Garcia gave him an order for transportation and a safe conduct. He fell in with a Spanish patrol and ate the documents. On reaching the United States in 1898 he was suffering from stomach trouble, malaria and wounds, and his weight was just ninety-five pounds.

When the United States went to war with Spain Funston was ready to fight again. He declined an easy job on Lieutenant General Miles' staff and finally got what he was after, a commission as colonel of the Twentieth Kansas regiment of volunteers. The regiment was ordered to the Philippines, and while waiting for sailing orders Colonel Funston married Miss Eda Blankart, a music teacher. Six hours later the transport sailed, and when Mrs. Funston rejoined her husband a month later in Manila it was just before a battle.

His regiment held an important place in the fighting around Manila when the Filipino insurrection began in 1899. During the fighting at Malolos the regiment was punished by a wicked fire from insurgents entrenched on the far bank of the Marikina river.

Calling for volunteers, Colonel Funston swam the river with a revolver gripped in his teeth and twenty men insurgent officers and four American officers Funston plunged into the jungle where no white man ever had been.

After eight days' march through the jungle, posing as prisoners taken by Aguinaldo's anticipated re-enforcements Funston and his men reached Aguinaldo's hiding place and arrested him without the loss of a man. The president made Funston a brigadier general of the regular army in recognition of the exploit.

At San Francisco Fire.

He served here and there until another chance came his way. This was the earthquake which shook San Francisco to pieces and started the great fire. As soon as the full scope of the catastrophe was known General Funston rushed troops to patrol the streets and guard the banks. As the disaster grew he rose to the occasion. He was policeman, fireman, undertaker and dominated civil authority with army efficiency. He did not hesitate to assume responsibility. He telegraphed to the secretary of war:

"I shall do everything in my power to render assistance and trust to the war department to authorize any act I may have to take."

How thoroughly he accomplished his task is history too recent to require repetition.

When William H. Taft, then secretary of war, went on his mission to Cuba General Funston went with him. Subsequently he served as head of the army service schools at Fort Leavenworth and in other routine posts of duty. Then came the Mexican crisis of the spring of 1914, when General Huerta's subordinates refused to salute the American flag at Vera Cruz after firing on American sailors and marines. The navy took Vera Cruz, and General Funston was sent there in command of a force of occupation and remained in command until the order to withdraw troops arrived.

ORDINANCE TO CONTROL DOGS RUNNING AT LARGE IN THE TOWN OF REIDSVILLE

SECTION I—Every owner or keeper of a dog shall annually on or before the first day of March cause to be registered, numbered, described and licensed, in the office of the Tax Collector or Town Clerk of the Town of Reidsville, and shall cause such dog or dogs to wear at all times around its neck, a collar distinctly marked with the registered number and year, or have a brass license tag attached to a collar with that information, and shall pay for such license, for a male dog One Dollar and for a female dog Two Dollars. All dogs running at large without such collar or tag, and all dogs not registered, numbered, described and licensed as aforesaid shall be impounded for a period of 72 hours and the owner thereof be required to pay a fine of Five Dollars for the release of any dog so impounded within said period of time, or failing so to do the dog or dogs shall be killed.

SECTION II—It shall not be lawful for any female dog, while in heat, to be found upon the street or alley of the Town whether licensed or unlicensed, running at large or accompanied by any person. Any such female dog, so found, shall be killed after a period of forty-eight hours unclaimed and the owner or the keeper thereof shall pay a fine of Five Dollars.

SECTION III—Any person who shall wrongfully remove the collar from a dog or alter or deface the same or shall remove a license tag from a collar upon any dog, or alter or deface the same shall be fined Ten Dollars for each and every offense.

SECTION IV—Any person who shall attach to the collar of any dog, any description, number, sign, out-of-date license tag or other mark for the purpose of deceiving the dog catcher or other officer charged with the enforcement of this Ordinance shall be fined Ten Dollars for each offense.

SECTION V—Copies of this ordinance shall be kept at the office of the Tax Collector or Clerk of the Town and shall annually, on or before the 1st day of March, be posted in different parts of the city under the direction of the Chief of Police.

SECTION VI—The sections of this ordinance shall be in full force on and after the 15th day of March 1917.

By order of the Town Commissioners.
