NEW CENSORSHIP RULE HAS BEEN DRAFTED

Regulations "relative to censorship," which newspapers of the country were asked to accept and follow voluntarily pending the enactment of a press censorship law by congress, have been announced after a conference between representatives of the state, war and navy departments and of four press associations.

Most of the principles laid down in the censorship regulations have been and are being observed in spirit by the newspapers, which have endeavored to follow the wishes of officials as to what to print and what not to print at this critical period. Practically all the criticism heard after the regulations were made public was directed to the sixth regulation, which reads:

It is requested that no information, reports, or rumors attributing a policy to the government in any international situation, not authorized by the President or a member of the cabinet, be published without first consulting the department of state.

Officials of the three departments represented were made aware that the newspapers of the country would unquestionably find cause for objection to several of the regulations and particularly to No. 6. It was made plain that the press associations had no right to speak for the newspaper press of the country, which reflect opinion and seek to give an idea of the impression made by governmental policies.

In this connection it was brought out that the head of one of the press associations had proposed, prior to the meeting, that hereafter the government should forbid the publication of any matter not contained in official statements handed out by the proper authorities and that copies of these should be furnished only to press associations and not to individual newspapers. If this proposal were adopted the people of the country would be kept from knowledge of public happenings which government officials did not choose to make known, and as a result it is suggested there probably would be a suppression of everything that might tend to excite criticism. It is understood that the officials concerned will reject this suggestion as unworthy of adoption in a country in which a free press is guaranteed by the constitution. This guarantee is contained in the first amendment, which provides: "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech or of the press."

Text of the Regulations.

This statement, embodying the text of the regulations, was given out after the conference:

"In view of the desire of the press of the country to refrain from the publication of information harmful to the public interest and with the intention of securing the maximum publicity with the least injury thereto, the following regulations are hereby issued for its guidance, which it is earnestly requested be closely observed:

Regulation 1.—No information, reports or rumors should be published which tend to disclose the military and naval policies of the government of the United States. (This regulation is directed against the publication of any news or comment which might reveal the strategic disposition or location of armies or their subdivisions or the fleet or its subdivisions; any message which might be adopted in consonance with the department of state for the furtherance of American defense and, in general, any plans for the use of the army and navy during the existence of a national emergency.)

Regulation 2.—No information, reports or rumors should be published which tend to disclose:

- (a) Movements or employment of armies and their subdivisions, fleets and their subdivisions.
- (b) Movements of vessels of the navy or their arrival at or departure from any port.
- (c) Departures of merchant vessels should not be mentioned, and it is desired that the name of the port of arrival be omitted.
- (d) Assignment or movement, whether as groups or individuals, of officers and men of the military and naval establishments.
- (e) Transportation of mails, supplies or munitions.
- (f) Information of any designs, inventions or test thereof, or of manufacture, transport or distribution of implements of war.
- (g) Concentration of military or naval supplies or location of such supplies.
- (h) Activities in or about arsenals, fortifications, army posts, naval magazines, navy yards, naval bases and radio stations.

Regulation 3.—Publication of any maps, diagrams or photographs which in any way might seem of military or naval value.

Regulation 4.—No moving pictures should be displayed which are of military or naval value.

Regulation 5.—Any doubtful matter should be submitted to the authorized representatives of the department concerned, who shall give an immediate decision thereon and keep the inquiry made strictly confidential.

Regulation 6.—It is requested that no information, reports or rumors attributing a policy to the government in any international situation not authorized by the president or a member of the cabinet be published without first consulting the department of state.

Note.—The above regulations shall not be enforced in any matters officially given to the press by properly authorized officials.

Young Women to Assist Government In Every Possible Way.

More than 80,000 campfire girls throughout the country have offered their services to the country in getting ready for possible war.

The girls will be used in making surgical bandages, first aid, wigwagging, food distribution to troops and the making of hospital equipment. It is planned that the girls shall form groups who shall visit the workshops of the division at stated intervals for the performance of their duty.

Poetry is not made out of the understanding. The question of common sense is always, "What is it good for?" It is a question which would abolish the use and be triumphantly answered

MOTHER TELLS HOW VINOL Made Her Delicate Boy Strong

New York City.—"My little boy was in a very weak, delicate condition as a result of gastritis and the measles and there seemed no hope of saving his life. The doctor prescribed cod liver oil, but he could not take it. I decided to try Vinol—and with splendid results. It seemed to agree with him so that now he is a strong healthy boy."—Mrs. THOMAS FITZGERALD, 1090 Park Ave., N. Y. City.

We guarantee Vinol, which contains beef and cod liver peptones, iron, and manganese peptones and glycerophosphates, for run-down conditions.

WILSON'S POWER

Under the Hay national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, the president has the authority to raise an army of 1,000,000 or more to use in or out of the United States. The same measure provides that he may draft men from eighteen to forty-five years old into the service of the country in time of war. Section 79 provides that: "When the members of three or more regiments of the national guard of any state, territory or district shall have been brought into the service, the reserve battalions of such regiments may be organized into provisional regiments and higher units.

"If for any reason there shall not be enough voluntary enlistments to keep the reserve battalions at the prescribed strength, a sufficient number of the unorganized militia shall be drafted into the service of the United States to maintain each of such battalions at the proper strength."

The act provides for one reserve battalion for each regiment of infantry or cavalry, each nine batteries of field artillery and each twelve companies of coast artillery brought into the service of the United States from the national guard in time of war.

Can Draft Limitless Numbers.

Such reserve battalion is to constitute the fourth battalion of any such regiment or twelve companies of coast artillery. Reserve battalions shall consist of four companies of such strength as may be prescribed by the president. The act also provides that the army can be increased by five annual increments, but in time of war or when war is imminent all of the increments can be put in at once, making a standing army of 250,000.

In time of war the president is empowered to draft without limit from the unorganized militia, which includes all men between the ages of eighteen and forty-five.

The author of section 79 of the Hay act asserts that the power of the president to enlarge the army under that provision practically is unlimited.

The president in time of war or when war is imminent can, through the head of any department of the government, in addition to the present authorized methods of purchase or procurement, place an order with any individual firm, association, company, corporation or organized manufacturing industry for such product or material as may be required.

President's Orders Imperative.

Compliance with all such orders for products and material is made obligatory and takes precedence over all other orders and contracts theretofore placed. Any person, firm or other business combination failing to comply with the provisions of this section of the act is to be deemed guilty of a felony and liable to punishment by imprisonment for not more than three years and by a fine not exceeding $50,000.

The Hay bill also provides for the procurement of gauges, dies, jigs, etc., necessary for the manufacture of arms to be used by the government or manufacturers of arms, ammunition and special equipment necessary to equip the land forces likely to be required by the United States in time of war.

The act provides for the establishment, maintenance and operation of nitrate plants to supply nitrate for manufacture of powder.

It contains a provision for an officers' reserve corps in time of war, and it is understood now that enough men are listed under this provision to train any number of soldiers the government may need.
