TIME WILL SOLVE
RUSSIAN PUZZLE

Months May Elapse Before Republic Is on Firm Basis.

AUTOCRACY GONE FOREVER

American Public Delighted at Change, Says Young Russian, but Must Remember That Rome Wasn't Built in a Day—Must Rid Army of Officers Loyal to Old Regime.

By ELIAS TOBENKIN
Of the Vigilantes.

"The greatest immediate service the American people can render Russia in the present crisis is to understand it and, understanding it, to be patient and charitable. Rome was not built in a day, and the most archaic of monarchies in the world cannot be turned into the most liberal of republics without friction or disturbance of some sort. To mistake, however, the pangs of childbirth of Russian freedom for a death throe is, to say the least, childish. Autocracy is gone from Russia never to return."

You would expect the man who spoke these words to be elderly and, being a Russian, to have a beard of proper dimensions and, being a former nihilist, to have hair to match the beard. But B. Vlodeck has none of these attributes. He is a man in the thirties, clean shaven, his hair cropped short. He speaks English well and thoughtfully and is anxious that no mistake be made with regard to his standing in this country. He is a citizen by choice—and a good one. Mr. Vlodeck was recently appointed news editor of the New York paper Forward. He looks upon things American as an American.

American Public Delighted.
"The American people," Mr. Vlodeck continued, "have taken the change of governments in Russia with a shout of joy. The American public was delighted to see Russia free itself from czarism and autocracy, but now we in the United States seem a bit peeved because there are disagreements in Russia between various parties and factions. We should not be. That was just the thing to expect.

"The revolution in Russia is the outgrowth of a labor disturbance. First came a strike, then a revolution, then freedom. Immediately after the revolution was accomplished the workmen of Petrograd, who were the backbone of the revolution, organized themselves into the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies. The nucleus of the organization was there since the revolution of 1905. They revived it now. The workmen of Moscow perfected a similar organization, and the workmen of other cities followed suit.

"About two or three weeks ago these councils held a convention, and a national organization was perfected. In the United States we call this Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies a Labor party. It is the first and, to date, still the only organized political labor party in Russia.

"I think it is of greatest importance to America not to misunderstand the issue. The working masses of Russia have forced the revolution. The working masses now demand a say in the government. They demand it through their organization, the Council of Workmen's and Socialist Deputies.

Council Is Not Pro-German.
"The Council of Deputies is not pro-German. The Russian masses are not pro-German. The pro-Germans in Russia have always come from the upper classes, the bureaucrats. The Workmen's Council is not flying into the arms of Germany. It is true that this party of working people would like to see a speedy ending of the war, but it would like to see this not out of love for Germany, but because it is afraid of these pro-German bureaucrats of the upper classes.

"The Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Deputies desires peace, but not peace at any price, largely because it wants to see civil and political liberty established on a firm foundation in Russia.

"The revolution of March 12 has left 1,000,000 officials who drew their livelihood from the old regime jobless and ready for trouble. The Russian officers of the army were intimately connected with the old regime. There are half a million of them to be replaced. The judiciary of Russia under the old regime was a farce. Men were appointed to office not to deal justice, but to serve the bureaucracy. These men have to be replaced by men who are democratic, who are followers of the new order. The press of Russia has been turned into a servile and corrupt institution by the old regime. It is now finding itself. It is cleaning house and opening its windows wide to sunshine and freedom.

Demand Immediate Solution.
"All of these problems demand immediate solution. The workmen are the men who paid heaviest in Russia's battles for freedom, and naturally they would not like to see the fruits of their victory snatched from them.

Plain Horse Sense

Gentlemen, we want you to understand the value of buying from B. S. Motley & Co. in Danville. For that purpose we're going to tell you something about this big concern every week in The Review for some time to come. We've recently bought the entire stock of Hodnett, Adkins & Mobley Co., and that, added to our already immense stock of hardware, gives us approximately a $115,000 set of merchandise for you to make your selections from.

We want you to know that it's just "plain, common, horse sense" for you to do your buying at the store with the largest stock. We sell Vulcan Chilled Plows—can't beat 'em, can you? We sell corn planters, mowers, farm tools of all kinds, paints, varnishes, fencing, roofing, Cream Separators, Gas engines and practically everything that any GOOD hardware store carries—and some things none of them sell. In some lines of the New Stock we've got a little more than we want to carry and we're making good sized reductions. Better ask us about it when here
