Cholera Morbus
This is a very painful and dangerous disease. In almost every neighborhood someone has died from it before medicine could be obtained or a physician summoned. The right way is to have a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy in the house so as to be prepared for it. Mrs. Charles Eneyart, Huntington, Ind. writes: "During the summer of 1911 two of my children were taken sick with cholera morbus. I used Chamberlain's Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy and it gave them immediate relief."

Croup, Whooping-Cough Relieved
Children's diseases demanded preparedness. When the child wakes you at night, gasping and strangling for breath, how thankful you are to have Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar-Honey at hand. This effective remedy loosens the mucous and permits free and natural breathing. Its soothing balsams heal the irritated membrane and arrests further inflammation. Pleasant to take. Keep Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar-Honey in the house for all colds and bronchial troubles. At your druggist 25c.

OUR DESTROYERS EXPERT HUNTERS

Flotilla Does Excellent Work In Submarine Warfare.

NEARLY EQUAL TO BRITISH

In a Month's Time They Learned Tricks That Required English Two Years to Master—Often Convey Transatlantic Liners Through the War Zone and Are Always Greeted Warmly.

The American destroyers have completed their first month of active service in the great war. They have been favored with excellent weather, which is a big factor in anti-submarine warfare. Most of the time they have had sunny skies and smooth seas, with just enough squall and storm to put their seamanship to test. The favorable weather conditions made their task of learning the technique of anti-submarine warfare much simpler and easier.

There has been no actual battle as yet between an American destroyer and the enemy, although several reports show that U boats have been sighted and have been compelled to beat a hasty retreat to the depths of the sea.

The American boats are assigned to work hand in hand with the British squadrons, being virtually assimilated into the British naval machinery. A destroyer is usually out for four or five days and then returns to port for two or three days while coaling and loading supplies. Thus every American sailor gets at least half a day shore leave practically every week.

Take Turns With British.

American boats take their turn with the British boats in all routine work of patrol and convoy. The work, although largely routine, is interesting, and the Americans have never yet found time hanging heavy on their hands. The lookout must be constant, and eyes must be trained to an unbelievable degree of keenness.

The young Americans take zealously to this business of finding the periscope needle in the nautical haystack, and daily reports of submarines sighted, of observations made, of wireless warnings sent broadcast, show that the American boats are already making an average of results almost as satisfactory as the long experienced British boats with which they are operating.

An assignment to convoy a liner "from home"—that is, from an American port—is regarded as an especially choice morsel. A transatlantic liner which sights the American flag approaching to escort her to land never fails to respond with a great waving of flags and handkerchiefs from her decks, and there is a fine exchange of wigwag signals in lieu of handshakes. Several American liners can already testify to the vigilant work of the American destroyers as convoys. Occasionally a fortunate liner finds herself escorted to port by American and British destroyers side by side, circling about her like twin sisters, a visible sign of the new era.

Ready on Arrival.

The American boats were ready for duty the minute they arrived. This was something of a pleasant surprise for the British naval men. It had been expected that some time would be necessary for certain installations and fittings, but the Americans had everything in readiness and were at once assigned to work.

Shore leave is generous on the American ships, and the American sailor is constantly in evidence in the village in which the crews are quartered, in the countryside roundabout and in a nearby city, where more metropolitan pleasures are available than in the restricted limits of this little place. The people of the towns have taken the American sailor and his strangely spendthrift ways right into their hearts. The American sailor seems all ways to have money, which is not so strange when it is considered that his rate of pay is considerably higher than that of the British tar.

"The American gets a dollar every time we get a shilling," is a common expression among the admiring British seamen. One of the American sailor's favorite ways of showing his opulence is his habit of always traveling first class on the railroad which takes him from the village up to the city, a trip of a few miles. The extra cost is only a few pence, but the unheard of idea of a sailor traveling first class strikes the populace as a startling and audacious maneuver.

Seldom Fooled Twice.

Local tradesmen who expected to find the visitor an easy mark soon learned their mistake, however, for he is seldom fooled twice and quickly learns to demand value for his money. Tea time in the village now has an American flavor. In all the little inns and shops and farther afield, even well into the wonderfully green country side and along the cliffs, which remind the seamen of the Palisades along the Hudson anchorages, one may find an afternoon group of British and American sailors drinking their tea and swapping yarns. The American quickly acclimates himself to the afternoon tea habit and finds it an amiable and satisfactory substitute for other things with plenty of opportunity for confidential chats with his new allies on a thousand and one subjects.

LORD NORTHCLIFFE HATED AND LOVED

New Head of British Mission Here Is a Hustler.

NO SPEECHMAKING FOR HIM

Will Attend Strictly to Business and Open an Office in Financial Section of New York—Has Condemned Many of England's War Policies, and Time Has Proved That He Was Correct.

Lord Northcliffe, the new head of the British foreign mission in the United States, is coming on business. He is not coming for a speechmaking or banqueting tour, but means business, and will start his work at once from an office in downtown New York.

This is his own idea of his post as successor to Foreign Minister Balfour at the head of the British war mission. He explained his plans in an interview prior to his departure.

"I am not on a speechmaking or banqueting tour," Lord Northcliffe declared in an interview. "I propose taking offices downtown in New York, where I can confer on the many business interests involved in the British and allied missions."

"I am hopeful not only of imparting any war lessons which I may have learned from many visits to the war to my American friends, but also to derive ideas which are certain to be evolved by American natural genius for invention."

"I feel much diffidence in succeeding so important and charming a personality as Balfour, but I shall do my best to harmonize the work of the allied missions and, I may say, to facilitate the enlistment of as many British subjects now in the United States as possible."

"On my arrival I shall of course first report at the British embassy in Washington."

The most interest in his selection centers in the bearing it may have on the status of Sir Cecil Arthur Spring-Rice, the British ambassador. Sir Cecil Spring-Rice has been criticised by Lord Northcliffe, who virtually called for the appointment of a new British ambassador in Washington. This criticism came at a time when the United States and Germany were still on nominally friendly terms.

The impression was created that Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador in Washington, was succeeding in getting the American press to publish information favorable to the German cause, and Lord Northcliffe, who apparently believed the allegations to that effect, let it be known that he thought Count von Bernstorff was outmaneuvering Sir Cecil Spring-Rice in creating sentiment in America. The comment of Lord Northcliffe along that line was cabled to American newspapers and created considerable discussion. The British government apparently was not influenced by it, as the status of the British ambassador was not disturbed.

Lord Northcliffe is a baron in the British peerage. His appointment to such an important diplomatic mission will give the British government the opportunity to raise his rank, and success in dealing with the United States might cause the king, at the instance of Prime Minister Lloyd George, to elevate him to the dignity of viscount or earl.

Admired, Hated and Respected.

The war had not proceeded very far when an Englishman on being asked to define Lord Northcliffe's influence on the government and people said: "They hate him, they admire him, but try as they may they cannot be indifferent to him."

In no country, it is believed, since the war began has a man in civil life been so constantly in the public eye or labored so continually, early and late, for schemes which he believed would benefit the empire and its allies and bring defeat to the Germans.

These schemes have pertained to almost every department of activity directly or indirectly identified with the war. They have concerned attacks, exposures and appeals in regard to the government and sympathy, information, advice to the allies and neutrals. They form a long list from the time he declared that Lord Kitchener was working beyond his physical and mental limitations and the exposure of the fact that shrapnel instead of high explosive shells were being used at Neuve Chapelle, the condemnation of the Gallipoli excursion, Nixon's fiasco on the Tigris, long before they became historical facts; numerous attempts to prove the futility, ridiculousness and even harm to the cause of the censorship of the press; the remorseless attacks upon "the old gang," as he terms the Asquith ministry through all its changes; the fearless espousal of David Lloyd George as the man who should really lead; his numerous trips to the western battle front and to Spain, all of which he recorded in feverish, graphic English in newspapers, magazines and books, and finally the measured but exultant welcome he gave the United States when it entered the war.

All these and many other schemes, ideas, policies and programs have virtually made Lord Northcliffe—as, indeed, he has been often called either in praise or contumely—"England's unofficial war steward."

LIFT YOUR CORNS OFF WITH FINGERS

Tells How to Loosen a Tender Corn or Callus so it Lifts Out Without Pain

You reckless men and women who are pestered with corns and who have at least once a week invited an awful death from lockjaw or blood poison are now told by a Cincinnati authority to use a drug called freezone which the moment a few drops are applied to any corn or callus the soreness is relieved and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, lifts off with the fingers.

Freezone dries the moment it is applied, and simply shrivels the corn or callus without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin. A small bottle of freezone will cost very little at any of the drug stores, but will positively rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or hardened callus. If your druggist hasn't any freezone he can get it at any wholesale drug house for you.

The Evils of Constipation

Constipation is one of the main reasons why the average human life is below 40 years. Leaving waste material in the body, poisons the system and blood and makes us liable to sick headaches, biliousness, nervousness and muddy skin. When you note these symptoms, try Dr. King's New Life Pills. They give prompt relief, are mild, non-gripping in action, add tone to your system and clear complexion. At your druggist, 25c.
