LEVER OUTLINES OUR FOOD NEEDS

Hopes For Complete Federal Control by Sept. 15.

SAYS SITUATION IS BRIGHTER

Chairman of House Committee, in Charge of Administration's Program, Sums Up Problems Which Proposed Laws Seek to Solve—Control Bill Chiefly a Precaution.

Asbury Francis Lever of South Carolina, chairman of the house committee on agriculture, the man who is feeling his way day by day in directing the administration's wartime food legislation, summed up the food measures now pending and stated his case so that a layman who knows nothing of the problem of getting legislation through the house and senate of the United States could understand.

"The most vital thing in the country right now, for the immediate future and for the duration of this war, is the full and complete control of the food situation in the lines of production, conservation and proper and economic distribution," said Mr. Lever.

For this Mr. Lever has his hands full. He is presenting to the nation a plan of wartime food control and regulation without precedent in the history of the country. He holds steadily to the major purpose to increase and conserve the nation's food and to provide for the allied nations before it is too late to avert what may prove a serious condition.

To thousands Asbury Francis Lever, representative, is just a name, and a name that connotes the theoretical end of the food problem at that. The farmer digging away in his plowed field in the summer heat and the housewife getting ready to "put up" berries in her kitchen dub the man who is attending to this vital matter for them a machine remote from the hardpan of living.

Problem of Kitchen and Farm. The farmer and the housewife will understand when one says that Mr. Lever has the kitchen and the farm end of the enormous subject at heart and is as hard worked as any farmer after a rush season of plowing and a little bit more so. This country is facing certain fundamental facts affecting the food situation. These are, according to Mr. Lever:

That the world is existing on a basis of inflated currency.

That there is a tremendous gold supply, reducing the purchasing power of gold.

That in this country there is a greatly disturbed transportation system, a poor shipping system.

That we have a great shortage of terminal facilities at ports.

That we are in more or less of a condition of hysteria, causing individuals to hoard food.

That there is some food speculation, with various and sundry things entering into it.

Mr. Lever explained the elements in the food legislation now before the lawmakers in Washington as they stand today after the hashing over they have had since being approved and recommended by the president and the secretary of agriculture. The first so called Lever bill, which has reached consideration in the senate as a substitute bill, provides for an appropriation to make a rapid and wide survey of the food situation under the auspices of the department of agriculture, including attention to seed conservation and live stock. So much for this important machinery. If the president is given the authority asked under the second Lever bill, which places in the hands of the president very plenary powers to handle the food and fuel situation of the United States both as it affects this country and the allies in this war.

It is Mr. Lever's belief that there is not in this country today an alarming situation, rather one to be taken up in due time before such a degree is reached. In brief the bill would give the president:

Full Power For President.

Power to prevent hoarding and monopolization of food; power to prevent extortion and extortionate prices and corners; in extreme cases, authority to take over storage plants, warehouses, mines, factories, to operate them and sell the products to the people under regulations; to require concerns engaged in storage warehousing to be licensed and to do business under rules governing their conduct. In order to stimulate production of the farmer, to fix a guaranteed farmer's profit; to handle in the most effective way, either through regulation or by absolute prohibition, the matter of speculation in the necessities of life, including fuel, clothing, foodstuffs; power to regulate the amount of grain that may be used in alcoholic drinks and even in nonalcoholic drinks or to prohibit the use of grain in beverages if he thinks it wise to do it.

The bill will carry a sufficient appropriation to carry out the purposes and to make good guarantees to the farmers. In order to obtain efficient returns it is Mr. Lever's hope that portions of the bill at least will be in operation by Sept. 15.

"I believe the situation will get better, that it would have improved without this legislation and that it will immeasurably improve with it," said Mr. Lever.

Just once. You put 2 or 3 drops on, and it dries at once. There's nothing to stick. You can put your shoe and stocking right on again. The pain is all gone.
