EARNESTNESS SEEN IN U. S. TRAINING WORK IN FRANCE

The deepest impression one gains after three weeks with the American soldiers training in Frasce is the absolutely earnestness with which the plendid young men of the army have undertaken the task which is before There is no disposition on them. their part or on the part of their officers to underestimate in any way the seriousness of that task and the hard work which remains to be done before America can take her place in the actual firing line.

The troops feel their responsibility keenly. They are indeed the small but effective nucleus about which will be built the great army and great army machine which the United States hopes eventually to have on the battlefields of France.

The men are earnest in their de sire to absorb war knowledge as quickly and as thoroughly as possible so that when called upon to act as instructors to succeeding units as they arrive they will be found eminently qualified. A great deal of the earnestness and this will to do is largely thee result of the enthusiasm of the young officers who but recently joined the colors and have taken up the business of war with a courage and determination that means volumes to the future of their country.

In return for this service of patriotism, in return for sacrifices already made and the still greater ones yet to come, the officers and men allke of the expeditionary force want to feel always that they have an understanding of sympathy and support from "the folks back home." That is a sentimental side of the soldier, whether he be Frenchman, Briton or German, in the fighting line, or American in the training camp.

Thoughts of Self Past

Face to face with the great adventure all the thoughts of self are of the high esteem in which he holds no regrets. things of the past. There is only his home and his people. the thought of home and the hope in the soldier's breast that what he is about to do will be understood and rightfully deserves. appreciated there. This spirit already pervades the young American army.

Under the best circumstances the training of soldiers in the everchanging methods of modern warfare is a labor requiring months of patient and painstaking effort.

A thousand of the most valiant and valuable men in the British army, from the French line they related exfor instance, did not put a foot in citing incidents. France until after they had had a whole year of training at home. On the other hand Germany called up boys of 17 years at the beginning of last September and sent many of them into the trenches af ter only six weeks of infantry trainisg, chiefly in marching and close order drill. This was possible because these boys were merely distributed among old, seasoned troops stop-gaps in the ranks of decimated

WORD FOR MOTHERS It is wrong for mothers to neglect their aches and pains and suffer in silence-this leads to chronic sickness and often shortens life.

Six months is nearer the ideal training period, but this rule applies to armies which have been fighting three years and have all the machinery established through which the men are passed smoothly and unending toward the front.

The building of this machinerythe great engine of war which makes behind the lines-is the staggering task now beeing dealt with. It is a task in a way greater than anything France or Great Britain have been called upon to do, for America's problems are those of France and Great Britain multiplied by three thousand miles of Atlantic ocean.

Way Long and Hard

The army that is here realizes all these difficulties but it also has unshakable faith in American genius for accomplishment and above all others, in the American will. The way to the trenches is long and hard, The daily drills and tasks neceessarily are much the same thing over and over again, all of which means a dearth of real news just now. But the soldiers are anxious that the folks at home should know that the absence of news does not mean absence of work. Nor can the value of each day's training be actually told until the American soldier at least stands out as the finished product.

It is not known how much longer the French Instructional division will remain with the Americans. The latter are proving so apt and the training camps are so well established that undoubtedly it will be only a comparatively short time when but a few picked French officers and non-commissioner officers will be retained to assist in the training.

Students of the war, which has now entered its fourth year, are convinced that the morale of the troops and the morale of the nations of the entente will prove to be the final factor in deciding the titanic struggle. The morale of the American soldiers in France can easly be estimated by the avidity with which they take up the training in offensive tactics as against defensive work. The latter is very essential, naturally, but it is a phase of training likely to prove a bit irksome to troops imbued with the offensive spirit, as are the Americans. They are frankly sincerely anxious, most of them, for their turn in the trenches to come even if at first it is only a temporary sojourn at the front for training purposes. The men are anxious to get gumpse of war and there is no doubt this arter they get it it will add in-
