

A HAPPY HOME BEGINS IN HEAVEN

So Said Rev. Mr. Craven Last Night

HAPPINESS NOT CHANCE

A Happy Home Is No Horse-Shoe Affair

SOMETHING DURHAM SHAMES

Large Number of Girls from Durham Go Into Hives of Shame in Other Cities of State and Country.

Rev. R. C. Craven's sermon on Sunday night was a discourse on the making of a home. He said that a happy home was the most blessed thing in the world, and that it was the next thing to heaven. His text was taken from Ecclesiastes 9:9-10: "Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest all the days of the life of thy vanity, which he hath given thee under the sun, all the days of thy vanity; for that is thy portion in this life, and in thy labor which thou takest under the sun. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."

These verses, said the preacher, are usually treated separately, and are used in that way by most of the great writers and preachers who take them for texts. The wise man means by what he said in this paragraph that a happy home was the happiest thing on earth, and he was in a fine position to judge of the statement that he was making. A home is not a matter of luck, nor does one often gain one as a matter of chance. A home is not merely a place with four walls, but is very much more than that.

When a couple stands before the preacher and says the vows that make them one, it is a much more solemn affair than is usually thought by the principals entering into the contract. They do not realize, ordinarily, half the meaning that is contained in the words, "until death do us part." One of the saddest things in all the world is to see a couple walk side by side for a long number of years, and then one of them drop out. It is but a short distance from the altar to the bier; the time is short. What one finds to do, that he should do with his might.

Death is not the chief calamity that the writer saw, and it is not the saddest in this city. A sadder is to have an opportunity to make a happy home and fail to do it. The most beautiful scene is a victory in something that is attempted, and the sight of the conquerors coming off with the honors. A happy home is really the beginning of heaven.

In speaking of the importance of making a home, the preacher was of the opinion that the state, the city and even the schools of the land are given many big problems to solve because of the failure of some one to make good in the home. Life's greatest mission is not to establish a state, or a government, or anything of this kind, but it lies in the making of a home.

Henry Grady's first visit to Washington, to the nation's capital, was referred to by the speaker as an illustration of the point that the preacher was trying to make. As he looked upon the magnificent buildings of the government, and upon the high monument built to the father of his country, he said, "Surely this is a great country, and certainly it will stand for all time." On his way back home he stopped at the home of a friend and spent a night. After the evening meal was over, the father gathered all his family about him for family worship, and read the bible and had the regular evening prayers. Here he saw a beautiful specimen of the American home, and he thought to himself, "Surely it is the American home that will stand forever, and it is this that is the most important thing in all the land."

At this juncture of the sermon Mr. Craven took occasion to remind his congregation of the great number of girls from this city who are annually going from their homes into the larger cities of this state and other states to enter into lives of shame and sin, there to be rescued, perhaps, sometime later in a very much worse condition. He said that he had heard that there were more girls from Durham in this business in Charlotte and Asheville, and even in Atlanta than from any other city in the state. He said that it was time something were being done to check this evil.

Making a perfect home, he said, is an art. Plighting their troth by a young couple is not in any way making a home. Mortar, brick, and wood that is placed in a building can be changed, but it is not so in the making of a home.

Each and every household has its own problems and the problems in one home are different from those in other homes. If the home life is what it should be there would be no trouble with children in the schools. Trouble first comes because of disobedience in the homes.

Here are the measurements of a perfect baby as found in the tiny body of Abe Edelowitz, the three-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Edelowitz, who scored 1,000 points out of a possible 1,000 in the baby health contest now being held in New York. Abe was born in a typical East side tenement house and has spent all of his life there.

Passing on to the part of the subject that exhorts a man to live and do his best in life, the preacher spoke of the helplessness of the dead toward the living. The world, he said, will have an opinion of every man after he leaves the world, and each one should strive to see that he does not leave the world with a bad taste in his mouth.

The living are equally as helpless toward the dead. They may constantly think of those loved ones gone on before. Often times one looks into the fact on a dead loved one and thinks of how much easier he might have made life for that one if only a little more thoughtfulness had been practiced.

As a last word in his conclusion, the preacher told his congregation that there was work for them to do, and that they should do it with all their might.

Colonel and Feet.

Was it Colonel Roosevelt making his first speech for woman suffrage or was it the barefoot girls dancing in the pageant?

One or both of these two attractions it must have been that brought out at the Metropolitan opera house last night probably the biggest and most brilliant audience that ever gathered in this country for the cause. Colonel Roosevelt played up nobly. He talked about "our cause" and how Michigan was "stolen from us" as naturally as if he'd spent his life campaigning for votes for women from soap boxes or corners. It was a great relief to the good progressives in the audience, who were noticeably a trifle nervous about their leader's maiden effort in the suffrage line.

"I saw Alice Carpenter this afternoon," one Mooseett was heard whispering as the colonel rose, "and she said she was dreadfully worried about how he'd make out."

The colonel may have been nervous, too, for he studied his notes carefully while Dr. Anna Howard Shaw was making the introductory speech and frequently consulted Mrs. Frederick Nathan, who sat beside him in the line of thirteen suffrage leaders—thirteen including the colonel, who by his own admission is a suffrage leader now—on the huge stage.

Once on his feet, though, Mr. Roosevelt soon got away from his notes. He merely used them to shake at the audience when making an important point. He spoke slowly and with emphasis, with that curious falsetto that breaks out in his voice, rather more in evidence than it used to be.

The colonel began quite modestly by a ditto to what "Mrs." Shaw—that's the title the beset-minded colonel gave the spinster suffrage leader—had said. And he did ditto her denunciation of those who "oppose woman suffrage in this country because of the foolish and wicked things done by some women in another country."—New York Tribune.

Easy Money.

One of the beautiful features of our 200,000,000 watermelon crop is that it comes at the time of year when we like to squeeze money out of the dear old Yankees without exerting too much. A man naturally fumbles in his pocket for coin in the presence of a Texas melon.—Houston Post.

Premature Rejoicing.

A North Carolina editor is rejoicing at the prospect of Uncle Sam collecting vast sums of Carnegie's ill-gotten millions through the income tax. Too soon, too soon. Andrew will dodge it well enough to bring Uncle Sam into his debt.—Houston Post.

When We Meet the Jap in Heaven. John Temple Graves says he found a Southern senator who wanted to drive every Jap from the United States. What will we do in the next world with the Japs we have induced to go to heaven? If we can't stand a few Japs during our short sojourn in this vale of tears, can we get along with them forever?—Houston Post.

Fry Fish in Cottolene

You can fry fish in Cottolene, and use the remaining fat for frying potatoes or other food. The odor of the fish will not be imparted to the other fried food.

Cottolene is not alone economical for the reason that it can be used over and over, but also because it is richer than butter or lard, and one-third less is required. It is twice as economical as butter; much more economical than lard.

Cottolene makes rich, digestible, tasty, healthful food. Does not make food greasy, and is free from indigestion.

Cottolene is never sold in bulk—always in air-tight tin pails, which protect it from dirt, dust and odors. It is always uniform and dependable.
