Georgia Congressman Billed Himself For a Speech That He Didn't Make.

SOME COMEDY IN HOUSE

Washington, May 18.—A performance was staged in the House today that concluded one of the most of the newspaper reports and led to write an account of an important wedding.

"Where is the wedding story?" the city editor asked the reporter. "There isn't any story," said the "son" news gatherer. "The bridegroom failed to show up."

Representative William E. Uphaw, of Georgia, went out to get a bill for the Federal Reserve Bank and also to get a bill for the Federal Reserve Bank.

The speaker of the House, Mr. Clegg, called the attention of the members to the fact that the bridegroom had failed to show up.

When he delivered his speech, however, it wasn't about anything at all. It was the Federal Reserve Bank bill.

Representative Uphaw spoke for nearly an hour on procedure and the House did not move.

The House, however, was not so enthusiastic because members had received a letter from Mr. Uphaw saying: "By consent of Congress I am scheduled to speak at 10 o'clock Saturday in behalf of my bill for Federal Reserve Bank."
