The world at your fingertips

When the family is away, leaving you alone at night, or bad weather keeps everyone indoors, you need not be lonely. The telephone is always ready to carry your voice to friends in other parts of town—or to any of the thirty-five million other telephones throughout the world.

A telephone in the home costs less than ten cents per day, and for this, you get protection—protection against loneliness as well as against danger. Call your friends for a pleasant chat at any hour; and in time of sickness, fire or other danger, summon assistance at a moment's notice.

Protection, alone, would make the telephone your "most convenient necessity."
