Patrol Captain Says Drunk Drivers Are Scarcer Since Beer

Beer, instead of complicating the problem of drunken driving, has in reality served to decrease the number of drunken drivers and hence decrease the number of automobile accidents, in the opinion of Captain Charles D. Farmer, of the state highway patrol. This opinion is also shared by many of the lieutenants and patrolmen. "There has been a noticeable decrease in the amount of drunken driving since beer went on sale May 1, and we have not had to make as many arrests for woody drivers as before that time," Captain Farmer said Tuesday. "Of course, there are still some who continue to drink hard liquor until intoxicated and then try to drive their automobiles, and we are continuing to get those."
