

THIS AND THAT
Has anybody seen Mr. Whitaker's flood book? Some-one borrowed it to look at and has probably overlooked returning it, and Mr. Whitaker has forgotten who he loaned it to.

The book in question was published by the Southern Railway Co. following the flood of the Yadkin, and other rivers, in 1916. It contains pictures of the flood at various heights and the damage done by the water.

We hope you'll pardon us for mentioning that fire again, but there is one thing that we are worried about. Our pet cat got out all right, but the one and only mouse we had in the entire house hasn't been seen since.

day, when we put on one of the grandest exhibitions of the nervous shakes ever to be seen in this section.

But enough of fires. While we are raving and ranting around about our troubles and the troubles of others, there might be some weighty matters floating around needing our expert attention.

But that's life, we reckon. If there were no wrecks, what would become of all the wreckers? Think it over and make your report at the next meeting.

After taking one look at McDaniel's advertisement in last week's issue of The Tribune we were fully convinced that he is trying to steal our stuff.

Still, after subjecting him to our interviewing department, we had the information that he ran such an ad. to get people to talking. That being the case, his ad. was a fair success.

FERTILIZER CO. TO GUARANTEE PRICE

Smith-Douglas Company to Continue 1936 Policy of Protecting Customers Against Decline

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 30. — R. B. Douglas, Vice-President of Smith-Douglas Company, Inc., fertilizer manufacturers of Norfolk, made the following announcement today with respect to price guarantee and refunds to customers during the coming season:

"A great many farmers have written us or inquired of our representatives as to whether or not we will continue this season our policy of guaranteeing prices, and in event of decline on price making refunds to customers in the same manner and for the same reasons as caused us to make such refunds last season.

"I am very happy to announce that our policy will be the same as in 1936. We will continue to guarantee our prices against our own decline. Also, we will continue to pass on to customers such savings as they help us earn by paying cash with order, cash on delivery, or by making early payment.

"We believe that this is the fair thing in dealing with our customers, and we will continue this policy indefinitely in the future."
It will be recalled that in July 1936 Smith-Douglass started the fertilizer and farming world by mailing checks to its customers totaling nearly $100,000, based mainly on its guarantee of its prices against decline.

At that time, Mr. Oscar F. Smith, President of Smith-Douglass, made the following statement with respect to his company's policy:

"To do other than guarantee our fertilizer prices against our own decline would be grossly unfair. It would be even more unfair after guaranteeing our prices not to refund to our customers in event we reduced our price. There is no reason why a customer who orders early at a certain price should be penalized if, at a later date, we decide for one reason or another to lower our price on the same piece of goods for the same crop. We have always tried to make it a point of company honor to see to it that no customer, regardless of when his order was placed, paid a higher price than other customers in the same area for the same grade and quantity."
