

THIS AND THAT

This missing book situation is getting serious. First, Uncle Bill Whitaker loses a book, and we advertise in this column for it. Then up pops J. R. Windsor with the fact that he, too, has lost a book, and we advertised for that. All this advertising reminded Uncle Dick Harris that he had lost a book—and doggone it—we were the one who had it. So we returned it.

But now, to make matters worse, up pops Will Holcomb, who says he has lost a book that he prizes very highly and he is offering a reward for its return and no questions asked. Someone borrowed it several months ago, he thinks, but he can't remember who. The title of the book is "Nursery Rhymes by Mother Goose." Any one having this book in their possession is urged to return it to Mr. Holcomb, at the same time taking the sheriff along to aid in collecting the reward.

of W. D. Turner, dec'd.
W. M. Allen, Attorney.

Our Uncle Culpepper once bought a book, forgetful at the time that he didn't know how to read. Being of Scotch descent he spent $500 acquiring an education so as not to lose anything on the purchase.

Speaking of our Uncle Culpepper reminds us of the tale our grandmother used to tell concerning Uncle Culpepper's ancestor, Snaddie Culpepper, who stowed on the Mayflower and came over with the Pilgrims. According to grandma, Snaddie was an easy going sort of fellow, but he made the mistake of marrying one of these nagging kind of women, and she no sooner had roped Snaddie in than she began to make life miserable for him.

Great, great, great Grandpa Snaddie stood it as long as he could, then lost patience. Being friendly with the chief of a tribe of Indians who lived nearby, he paid him five dollars to kidnap his wife.

The Indian chief fulfilled his part of the bargain and for a few days life was very peaceful for great, great, great Grandpa Snaddie. Then one day the Indian chief came in and offered him ten dollars if he'd let him bring great, great, grandma back.

There were some who thought that this woman was one of the reasons the Indians received such a bad impression of the first white settlers.

We were listening to someone discuss the current liquor situation in North Carolina the latter part of last week. This person was of the opinion that those who favor the county option plan and those who are against it, should not be referred to as "wets" and "drys." Rather should they be divided into two classes as being for "control" or "uncontrol" as is now the case.

There is liquor, plenty of liquor, being sold here and elsewhere every day, this man pointed out that brings no revenue to any one other than those who unlawfully sell it. Under the county option plan the sale of whisky would be under supervision with a considerable amount of revenue going to the county.

Such control, he said, would work a hardship on those unlawfully selling the stuff. The county police would be a heap more interested in closing up illicit liquor places with them cutting into the county revenue than they are now while no revenue is available.

Sounds logical, but then that's only one side of the question. And being in our accustomed good health we'd rather not get mixed up in it to any great extent.

EDITORIAL

Now that the Elkin school gymnasium is practically completed and a brand spanking new basketball tournament nearly ripe for the playing, there comes to our attention an editorial written by Miss Lesbia Graham concerning the matter.

The regular editorial columns of this particular issue having already been filled with what you'll find in 'em, we're taking the privilege of printing Miss Graham's editorial herewith, trusting she won't mind it being placed in a place where practically no one will see it, other than our nine regular readers.

Apologizing thusly, the editorial follows:

"Now that the dream of hundreds of Elkin's high school students (some graduated and some here with us), has been realized and we really possess a gym, the students should be very grateful! If ever a high school needed a gym, Elkin is that! For years—indeed ever since our school has had athletics, and basketball in particular—we've had outstanding athletes—some of the best players to be found anywhere—with nothing better than that dilapidated warehouse (known as the "cracker-box") to fill the needs of our basketball teams.

"In the past our basketball players have done their best under the prevailing circumstances, playing a good game unmindful of chilly atmosphere in the "cracker-box," and of the very small handful who had come to cheer the team on to victory. Today, with one of the finest gymnasiums to be found anywhere almost completed, it is up to the students to make all that goes with the gym the finest to be found. The students, alone, CAN make our standard the highest.

"To christen our new gym (a memorial to the good intentions of many who have attended this school and have gone on), we are planning a basketball tournament which is to begin February 26.

"A new school! A new gym! Is there any more we could ask?"

WINDS DO HEAVY DAMAGE SUNDAY

Charlotte, Feb. 21.—A severe wind swept through Charlotte and neighboring Concord tonight, demolishing some houses and doing much other heavy damage, but only one serious injury was reported.

A number of persons were slightly hurt by flying timbers and glass, but did not require hospital treatment.

The storm cut a path several blocks wide and approximately three miles long through Charlotte, then hopped through the open country to Concord, 20 miles away. Police reported hundreds of Concord houses damaged, but no dead or seriously injured.

CONFESSES MURDERS
Cincinnati, Feb. 21.—Twice thwarted in plans for suicide, Joseph Caproni, 20, was under close guard in jail today after police announced a signed confession that he shot and killed Beatrice A. Roth, 20, his pretty former fiancée as she sat in the auto of a new escort.

Police announced that he confessed he killed the girl because he was "mad at her" for jilting him.

IT'S A BANK'S BUSINESS TO Lend Money

FILL PERSONAL NEEDS WITH A BANK LOAN

Personal expenses of an unexpected nature often cause unnecessary sacrifice in the families of salaried and wage earner groups. These emergency expenses can usually be met with a bank loan, and good business practice recommends this course.

Loans to responsible individuals are easily arranged, and the convenience of such a method of borrowing recommends it to many who have not had an occasion to call upon the services of a bank. Investigate our loan service!
