

STREAMLINED HOGS COMING

Housewives Are Using Less Lard, So Why Make Hogs So Roly-Poly?

SUBJECT IS DISCUSSED

Omaha, Neb. — "Streamlined hogs" will soon begin to replace the roly-poly, hardy porkers which have been the traditional "mortgage lifters" and the pride of the cornbelt farmers. This forecast was one of the dominant themes of the midwestern conference of agriculture, industry and research which drew an attendance of about 500 here this week, including representatives from 28 colleges and organizations in 14 states.

It was intertwined with discussions of impending trends of import to agriculture and serious questioning of the nationalistic objections of some of the chemurgists attending the conference.

Why streamlined hogs? For practical reasons and not mere styling, it appeared. Housewives are using less and less lard each year as chemists perfect the processes of making vegetable cooking oils. Consequently less and less and less market for the fatty type animal.

But if the cornbelt farmers begin to develop leaner hogs to yield meaty bacon akin to that which has won such favor in Europe, what will become of the millions of bushels of corn which in normal crop years bring such bad dreams to the crop reductionists in Washington?

Dr. H. E. Barnard, director of research, Farm Chemurgic Council, Dearborn, Mich., forecast that 20 years from now few hogs will see corn in its natural state. The farmer will haul his crop to a chemical processing plant, he believes, where the fattening starch will be removed for making syrups and alcohol for motor fuel. The residue of gluten and oil press will then go back to the hog pen.

That the shadow from the tall corn stalks is already beginning to lengthen and rival that from the derricks in the oil fields was indicated in talks by Dr. Henry G. Knight, chief of the bureau of chemistry and soils, United States Department of Agriculture and Dr. Leo M. Christensen of Atchison, Kansas.

Dr. Knight said that in the not distant future automobile motors would be developed to utilize solid fuel made from starch in corn and other crops.

Dr. Christensen, operator of what is believed to be the first commercial plant in this country manufacturing motor fuel from agricultural products, said that at normal corn prices alcohol can now be made for about 17 cents a gallon. A mixture of 10 per cent alcohol and 90 per cent gasoline has the same antiknock qualities as "premium gasoline," he claimed, while a mixture of 15 per cent alcohol has a higher antiknock rating than any "pure gasoline" now available.

Forecasts were made that in a few years the alcohol motor fuel requirements of the nation would make for the farmer a market for his corn more than 20 times as great as that now offered by the distilleries.

A nationalistic emphasis was apparent in talks by some chemurgists who stressed the development of processes which would utilize American raw materials, make unnecessary "foreign importations" and undermine the reciprocal tariff policy of the State Department.

This led the chairman of the panel discussion at the concluding session, Dr. T. W. Schutz, of the Iowa State College department of economics and sociology, to inquire:

1. Is it desirable to separate carefully and completely research objectives from political aims and doctrines?

2. Is it good public policy to advocate that the new uses which research finds for agricultural products should be introduced and forced into consumption channels by means of special taxes, bounties, tariffs or any other form of subsidy?

The consensus seemed affirmative on the first question, but speakers shied away from the second, and the conference did not follow through to adoption of a policy on protection of new industries.

The council voted to hold another farm chemurgic conference in Omaha in 1938.
