YADKIN FARMER IS CRITICALLY INJURED

A. J. Reinhardt, 55, prominent farmer of the Brooks Cross Roads section and an uncle of Leslie Reinhardt, of Elkin, is in a critical condition at Hugh Chatham hospital here following injuries sustained Monday afternoon while operating a grass mower pulled by a team of horses.

It was said the team took fright and ran away, upsetting the mowing machine and causing it to strike Mr. Reinhardt's head, causing a bad fracture of the skull.

Hospital attaches stated Wednesday afternoon that his condition was worse.

The experts making the study were E. G. Moss, director of the state tobacco experiment station, Oxford; W. A. Shands, director tobacco insect study at the station, and Dr. R. F. Poole, plant pathologist, State College. They came into this section of the state Saturday morning and covered most of the better tobacco growing counties yesterday and today.

The seriousness of the disaster is indicated in the urgency with which Congressman Hancock and Doughton appealed to the specialists to make their study and the quick response they received.

None of the three experts expressed an opinion on how far the crop of tobacco would be cut. However, Mr. Brumfield stated that conceivably the crop could be cut as much as half and that the remainder of the crop naturally would not be up to normal inasmuch as it would be brought to maturity under such abnormal conditions.

They visited the farm of J. A. Gough, six miles south of Elkin, this afternoon and found tobacco growing normally on his farm which had been sprayed according to the formula given above. Mr. Moss stated that the Gough farm had the best crop of tobacco he had seen since he left the experiment station.

It was indicated that other sprays could be used satisfactorily, either as a liquid spray or a dust spray. One part of paris green and six parts of hydrated lime (ordinary slaked lime) used as a dust will do the work. Rotenone (one per cent) can also be used at the rate of about five pounds to the acre and is regarded as thoroughly effective. The state specialist at State College also has literature which discusses the problem at length.

With the view of bringing the problem under control as quickly as possible, a series of meetings has been arranged in Yadkin county for Thursday, June 17, which will be attended by Dr. Luther Shaw, plant pathologist and J. O. Rowell, entomologist, of State College. The meetings Thursday will be held at the following places at the times indicated.

D. E. Whitaker Farm, Center, 8:30 o'clock; N. F. Shoaf Farm, Marler community, 10:30; A. C. Stinson Farm, near Booneville, 1 o'clock; T. C. Prim Farm, Smithtown, 3 o'clock.

All farmers are invited to attend these meetings and hear the discussion of problems relating to their chief money crop.

Particular Farmer: "Do you want a job digging potatoes?" Weary Willie: "Yes, if it's digging 'em out of graves."
