

IN WASHINGTON
WHAT IS TAKING PLACE BY

Editor's note — Senator Reynold's column for this week, is written as he is en route to Washington from a visit to Western states, and deals with some of the impressions he has gained.

Any swing through the country will quickly convince an individual that North Carolina selected the psychological time to spread its program for recreational development and attracting new industries. The state is much in the eyes of people throughout the country. The progressive way in which it came through the depression has attracted national attention. It explains why the state is already reaping benefits from its new development program. Perhaps the thing that impressed me most, when numerous invitations were pressed upon me to make addresses, was that those interested wanted to hear about North Carolina. What are labor conditions? How are the roads? Do the Great Smokies compare with the Western National Parks? These and many other questions were asked on every hand.

There are, of course, many reasons for this interest. Great numbers of Tar Heels have migrated westward over a long period of years and retain an interest in their home state and tell others about it. Equally as important, as one of the first states to adequately develop a highway system, North Carolina won attention that has not been overlooked with the passing years.

Moreover, the word has spread that through diversified agriculture, commerce and industry, North Carolina has not felt the effects of the depression as keenly as some other states. This view has been enhanced by the fact that Tar Heels, as a rule, spread confidence wherever they go and implant a desire on the part of others to see the state.

The result will be that the program to attract visitors and new residents to the state is destined to prove the greatest step forward North Carolina has taken in recent years. I believed this when I left Washington for a survey of conditions and a combined vacation. I am more than ever convinced of it as I head toward Washington for the special session of Congress.

There is no doubt that people generally realize that important national adjustments in the economic field must continue. However, they want the confidence of business to be kept up through assurances to the business man as to what he may expect in the way of regulation and taxes. To delay this assurance will undoubtedly be more harmful than to give it as quickly as possible. Farmers are conscious that surpluses are controlled by weather as much as by what the farmer does, and only want reasonable help from their Government. But like the business man, they want to know what is going to be done. Again early action will be more helpful than delayed action.

As a result of such thoughts reflected by hundreds in conversations, and in the faces of thousands in "public forms" on important questions, the legislators who have attempted to reach the people and obtain their views during the time since adjournment of Congress, are best prepared to meet the demands of the day. New confidence in all that we are doing is found everywhere.

BETTER HEALTH

By DR. J. ROSSLYN EARP
Director, New Mexico Bureau of Public Health

WHY BABY CRIES
There is the mother who worries too often. There is also the mother who too seldom responds. It is not always kind to "let the baby cry."
It is part of a mother's job to learn why the baby cries. The cries that are best left alone are those which demand attention and those which express indignation when the royal whim has been disregarded. The latter may be very obstreperous and may be accompanied by breath holding which makes the baby go black in the face. Do not worry, mother, this is probably the last card in his pack of tricks.
But you should worry if he cries because he is hungry. Did you weigh him before and after his meal? Are you observing the growth curve of his weight? If it is summer he may be thirsty. He will need his drinks of water between meals just as you do. If he is very small he is unable to change his position; it is your job to turn him over when he complains. Has he just been fed? Very likely he has swallowed a lot of air and is very uncomfortable. Hold him upright and pat him gently on the back. The indigestion from which we suffered in infancy is now called either "food allergy" or "improper formula." Crying from either of these causes is intermittent. If it is food allergy you must try to find out which foods are at fault. Look out for milk, eggs, wheat and spinach.
Never neglect the frantic scream of pain. Even a few hours delay may endanger the baby's life. Baby cannot tell you that it is his ear which hurts, but your doctor has ways of finding out and he alone can tell you what must be done.

Most Valuable
John: "I say, Harry, which is of the most value, twenty quarters or a five-dollar bill?"
Harry: "Why, twenty quarters, of course."
John: "Wrong! The five dollar bill is the most valuable, because when you place it in your pocket you double it, and when you take out again you find it in creases."

depression may be brought on by being in love or on the stock exchange. Malaria and influenza are most to be feared among infections. The strain of childbirth is another not uncommon cause. In such cases the doctor may help by hastening convalescence or by prescribing treatment to lessen strain and shock.

What of melancholy that comes and goes abruptly without apparent cause? In such cases the patient can get more help from within than from without. Experience teaches that the cloud will pass. Let him hold on to hope and so to courage. Let him avoid self pity that most subtle and dangerous enemy of moral self control. As a steady policy both in depression and in health let him cultivate interests outside of himself. A life of wide and varied interests is in the end his surest line of defense.
