Two Sides To The Picture

Boake Carter, popular news commentator, through and off the air is immensely concerned about any American attitude toward Japan that would serve to interrupt our trade relations with that nation. He stressed the point that Japan is our best customer-buying more than she sells.

But the picture can be turned around for a look at our trade with China which is not so significant as to the items we sell as to the necessities we buy. For we are buying things from China that we can ill afford to do without, and Japanese success there would be something more than an interruption—it would be a tragedy, for Japan would take pleasure in marking us off the list of preferred customers.

China is the chief source of tungsten, a filament that is necessary in the lighting of American homes; antimony for alloying metals is a Chinese product: tung oil is nec essary for quick drying varnishes; Chinese wool for our carpets; Chinese sesame oil for scrap, and many other items that our industries must have in their manufacture.

China is the world's greatest exporter of eggs in dried or frozen form. We could and should manage to get along without these it is true, but getting along without them would increase our manufacture costs.

And certain it is that Japan's success would in a few short years eliminate that nation as our best cotton customer, for that is one of the things Japan is seeking in trying to shoot subservience into the Chineseto provide cotton fields that will make her independent of America.

Charting a New Course

Mr. Landon and Mr. Hoover, both were defeated at the polls, and the defeat of one was about as drastic as the other. Both ran for the highest office within the gift of the people, and at the head of the same par-That would seem to give each an equal footing when they ask to be heard concerning the future course of the party.

Mr. Hoover is convinced that an offyear convention of G. O. P. leaders to draft a new declaration of principles for his party, and warns that elections cannot be won by "joy-riding on mistakes." He declares that the "people only join in the march when they know where they are going."

Mr. Landon would have his party adopt policy of watchful waiting, believing that it is bad politics to make commitments three years in advance; commitments that might turn out to be embarrassing. Be that as it may, the thought here is that there is nothing to lose in a bold declaration of principles honestly and sincerely arrived at, and there is no good reason why the Republican party in 1938 cannot indicate to the voters where it will be headed in 1940—unless political expediency is to be placed above political righteousness. And Mr. Hoover, a man with great ability and the faculty for clear statement of issues, as witness his Boston speech, if given the privilege could help write a platform that would endure for more than three years. Joining Mr. Hoover in favor of an early national conference of Republicans is Dr. Glenn Frank, former president of the University of Wisconsin, who does not believe that the Republican party should leave everything to chance and in the national convention in 1940 write a catch-all platform. He wants the party to stand for something —not everything.

And just by way of prophecy, put this down in your little red book: This selfsame Dr. Glenn Frank will be much in the headlines 'twixt now and 1940, with his name at the head of the ticket by no means an impossibility.

The Danger Of It

With more than fifty deaths directly traceable to an "exilir," the basis of which is fundamentally sound and constituting a valuable discovery that may yet perform miracles in the treatment of certain diseases when it is properly balanced, should be enough to give pause to habitual "dose-takers," who listen to quacks and venders, irresponsible in the extreme.

It is significant that doctors themselves, at least a few of them, had been fooled in the sulphanilamide preparation, and following the directions of the manufacturer had prescribed for patients. The point is that if the preparer of this "elixir," a con-cern that stands well among its fellows, could make such a damaging mistake as this, how may one expect any sort of safety and exactness from the faker who bases his hope of profit on the suckers that fall for his ballyhoo.

Most "patent medicines" are concocted of little inexpensive nothings, with no other purpose than to extract money from a gullible public. Not long since, the air was full of the astounding merits of a "remedy" that analysis shows is made of the cheapest horse-salts dissolved in water and when packaged attractively sells for a dollar a bottle. There is plenty to indicate that the folks fell for it, without even crossing their

But there are enough of the other kind: the health-sapping, habit-forming, actually dangerous "remedies," to make them next to a national tragedy. It is a pity that sensible people refuse to see the danger. The very fact that these patent medicine venders seek to market their wares where they presume there is nothing but ignorance, should be enough to arouse resentment from those they approach. But all too often they are welcomed.

There are so many conflicting conditions to be considered in the giving and taking of medicines, that none of it should be used except after careful diagnosis by one who is trained in his work. That's why physicians and pharmacists are hedged about with laws and why we should keep medicine out of our systems when not prescribed and prepared by them.

The Crop Control Issue

The North Carolina Grange, meeting in Winston-Salem last week had the opportunity of hearing a speaker favorable to compulsory crop control and one who is not favorable, and then decided to vote neither way on this issue.

Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace presented the administration viewpoint, and Senator Bailey gave his reasons for opposing compulsory control. And in the course of his remarks, the North Carolina Senator is quoted as having said that he will not vote for compulsory control, "although there is more sentiment for it here than perhaps any other State in the nation.

That statement alone is significant because it shows that Senator Bailey subscribes to the theory that when people elect their representatives to Congress they commission him to rely solely upon his own good judgment and let it go at that. And really there is a school of thought that runs along that line, but there is another that holds that a representative should represent, which manifestly the Senator is not doing when he says that although he knows the sentiment of his people is for compulsory crop control he will vote against it.

Senator Bailey has presented his argument on this issue time and again, and by his own acknowledgment he has not been able to convince his constituents. Being the servant of those who sent him to Washington, to our way of thinking, he should respect their wishes in matters that do not challenge his integrity.

Be that as it may, both Secretary Wal-lace and Senator Bailey present plausible argument for their respective sides on this issue. Senator Bailey presents an alternative program of "inducements to induce farmers to produce fewer soil depleting crops," and offers the "export bounty" plan as the most rational and cheapest solution to the farm problem in the South. Maybe he is right, considering cotton farming as a whole, but we wager that under the export bounty plan the small cotton farmer would be left holding the bag.

National Grange officers are fighting the New Deal program at every turn, and tried manfully to deliver its membership vote against Mr. Roosevelt in the campaign, and while there are reasons to suppose that a majority of Grange members in North Carolina favor government control, it was contrived that they should not say so, plain NUMBER OF CHANGES IN RESIDENCE MADE
