Autumn leaves are something to rave about, even when they clutter up the lawn.

What Europe's diplomats need to do is sit awhile at the foot of Egypt's Sphinx.

Diversified farming doesn't necessarily mean that a mortgage should be added to the farm program.

"A family man is one who works all day to provide for his family and then feels grateful if one of them sews on a button for him."—Robert Quillen.

There she blows again! Anthony Eden tells the British Parliament that Uncle Sam called that "quarantine" conference. Meaning we reckon, that if there is any quarantining done we will have to do it.

Is It the Beginning of a Clean-Up?

That was an impressive start of a rum-runner purge for Northwest Carolina at Winston-Salem last week, and as such commands the deep interest of the people of this immediate section.

A Winston-Salem newspaper man estimates that these conspirators, representing to rum-running gangs have poured 100,000 gallons of liquor into the twin-city in the last year, which indicates a right profitable business, thank you, as well as a thirsty populace.

It is significant that among the twenty-five are some of the ring-leaders in the racket, not all of them, perhaps, but enough to show that the law in this case was not satisfied with taking the go-betweens for a ride.

If any one of them expected tenderness and mercy at the hands of Judge Johnson J. Hayes they were disappointed. Feling as he does about liquor it was an easy matter for him to say "eighteen months" and "three years" in Chillicothe or Atlanta.

But what has Winston-Salem to say about it? In the break-down of these deliveries, it is estimated that around 150 gallons of contraband liquor was poured into that city every day for the past year.

Doesn't Seem to Hinder

When any human activity presents a picture of enduring success, the tax hounds are not slow to scent its trail, and beat a path to its door.

More often than not when they tap the till of heavy profits they continue the toll in mounting schedules until there is utter discouragement.

But the auto industry is about the only exception to this rule. Taxed almost beyond all conception, the sales continue to mount, replacements are a certainty, and although loaded to the hilt with taxes the industry thrives to the point where it has become one of the most extensive in the land.

Count 'em: Registration fees, drivers' license, luxury taxes, sales taxes, gasoline taxes, tire taxes, and accessory and title fees. These run the totals to a big percentage the costs of owning a car.

The increased and increasing output indicates that even though those who buy pay these tolls, apparently they like it, and autos continue to crowd the assembly lines of dozens of makers, every one of them a ticket-taker for governments that must have money to keep the trough full of swill for those who have their feet in it.

If this proves anything it is that the richest tax field and one that brings the least grumbling is that which involves the pleasure of the American people.

Can't Come

The decision of England's one-time king to defer indefinitely his proposed visit to the United States will be disappointing to socialites who have been all agog about what was ahead for them, but if that is the way he feels about it, there won't be much sleep lost because of it in this neck of the woods.

True, a lot of us would have been pleased to have the Duke, if he really is sincere about studying labor conditions in this country, to visit around undisturbed and unpolled as he was in Germany where he was allowed to see only one side of the picture and that painted by a representative of Adolph Hitler.

The cancellation was prompted by the attitude of Lewis and Green, heads of the organized labor groups, not toward Edward himself, but Charles Bedaux who seemed to be acting as advance agent for the show. Bedaux, who has made gobs of money charting efficiency plans for industry is the originator of the "stretchout system."

So far as the stretchout system is concerned, it has merit that common sense will recognize at a glance, but that is an argument that calls for all the details of its workings, except that it could be boiled down to say that the system provides for a reward for the ambitious worker who produces more without penalizing those who are willing to measure their efforts by the clock.

But going back to the Duke's non-visit. We sympathize with Wally in her disappointment in the trip back home, for she must be lonesome for the good old American ways.

The Grange Leadership

The election of Harry B. Caldwell as Master of the North Carolina Grange has been given favorable comment throughout the State, although his selection means that native Tarheels have willingly been eased aside to make room for a Northerner who has been among them for only a comparatively short time.

Caldwell is an Ohioan whose first work in North Carolina was in our neighbor county, Wilkes, where he organized Grange units that have endured. The fact of their continued strength and interest attest Caldwell's efficiency in laying the foundation. He will make a clean and alert leader for this farm organization, and one commentator declares that under his leadership the Grange will attain a prestige hitherto unreached or it will break up into factions, rather than stand still.

Harry Caldwell has been among us long enough to know that rural North Carolina is not exactly a replica of rural Ohio, and if sentiment here runs counter to the national policies of the Grange he will know it without being told.

For one thing is certain: right now there is a differing viewpoint. The national Grange is one of the oldest farm organizations and is particularly strong in the central and middle western sections. But the national Grange is up to its ears in politics. Its officers have loudly opposed administration policies, while North Carolina farmers have been inclined to string along with the New Deal.

It is significant that at the Winston-Salem meeting of the Grange, although it is generally admitted that the majority of members in this State favor compulsory crop control legislation, the State Grange straddled the issue. Obviously this action was in deference to the parent organization if not actually at its behest.

We are sincerely hoping that Harry Caldwell will pilot his organization over the shoals and into still waters, because it can be made a force for good in North Carolina with able leadership, such as we are sure he is capable of providing.

FIRESIDE PHILOSOPHY

(By C. M. Dickson)

Neither the cynic, the stoic, nor the Epicurean has the proper philosophy of life.

The person who helps one out of trouble, of course, is a friend, but the one who keeps him out, is a better one.

The safe engineer is the one who keeps his eye in advance of his train.

The size of a person depends upon whom he is with.

If every man could hear his funeral before he dies, what a rosy old world this would be!

One difference between a wise man and a foolish one is that the wise one looks ahead and the foolish one looks behind.

Experience is one of the "torch-lights" of civilization.

One should be careful in accepting a gift from an enemy.

Neither sophistry nor platitudes will suffice for real truth.

The gods have no greater gift than that of gratitude.

The quickest way to kill a "tale" is to kill it before it is born.

No person has any friends to lose.

A good habit should be cultivated; a bad one should be let die.

If the head of the fountain is muddy, the whole stream is polluted.

The person who lives right will evidently die right.

Just one little daisy by the side of life's road is worth more than all the floral wreaths that can be placed upon a dead man's grave.

Tell me the things in which you are primarily interested and I will tell you the stuff you are made of.

No person is fit to rule who, in a great measure, is not able to control himself.

One immediate need - real home-makers.

However worthy the cause, full credit cannot be given to the person who acts because of dire necessity.

Wise indeed is he who, through foresight, forestalls distress and destruction.

The only safety for the little fish is to either stay out of the water or swim faster than the big ones.

COOL SPRINGS

Who of us does not remember our happy visits to the old home-place, when the table had all the extra "leaves" added to make room for the children, and the visiting friends?

Well that is what happened at Cool Springs Sunday, and many visitors too were welcomed here. The house was filled to overflowing, and all standing room taken and yet the crowd gathered.

An old-fashion friendliness, a hearty comradeship marked the gathering through the song session; and we had just one grade of singing and that was good.

Sixteen groups of singers were present. Those participating in the song service were: Cool Springs' Old Time Singers (without music), Yadkin Valley Four, Bethel Four, Glenhope Singers of Burlington, Eureka Quintette, Sunshine Quartette, Young Ladies Quartette, Cool Springs, Happy Day Quartette, South Fork of Winston-Salem, Friendly Four, East Elkin, J. P. Adams and daughter, Shady Grove had two groups present, a quartette and an octette, Cool Springs' Junior Duet, Wall Quartette, Jonesville.

The fact that the writer stood in a place unbelievably small, did not hinder a keen enjoyment in the splendid program presented under the capable management of the chairman, (himself a noted singer), Mr. D. D. Day.

The next singing will be held with Arlington Baptist church, beyond Jonesville, the first Sunday afternoon in February, 1938.
