He May Not Be Jesse, But He Will Start You To Wondering chance otherwise as we were wanted dead or alive. But this offer was also ignored, and the search for us went on. Then we went into business on our behalf."

The old man told of the robbery of a Chicago bank and of the train robbery. Other hold-ups would probably have come in for their share of attention had not a question been put as to his supposed death.

"Did Bob Ford know that it was Bigelow he was shooting, or did he think it was you?" he was asked.

"There was never any doubt about who he was shooting," Jesse said. "It had all been planned."

It was then that Jesse changed clothes with the slain outlaw, who was killed in the James home, exchanged guns, and made his escape into oblivion that was to last for 51 years. To the world, Jesse James was dead—shot in the back by a member of his own gang.

Those 51 years were spent in wandering, in following the races, in breeding horses, Jesse said.

Just why he is not wanted now by the authorities, the old man did not make quite clear. He said he has absolute proof that he is the real Jesse James, but he admitted that he has a difficult time making folks believe him.

According to the year in which Jesse James was born, he would now be 91 years of age. The old man looked that old, but was remarkably clear minded for a man of that age. Although wrinkled and with hair as white as snow, he is active. And—this old man who claims to be Jesse James—is courteous and obliging.

That he really believes himself to be Jesse James is apparent after a talk with him. Dates, places and events come readily to mind. And there is a marked resemblance to authentic photographs of the Missouri outlaw.

Jesse James? We wonder.
