

State Road Man, Lame Three Years, May Soon Walk Again

Could Recover Within Year Under Treatment

A 26-year-old State Road man, helpless and paralyzed, has a ray of hope to get back on his feet and earn a living for his wife, little daughter and himself.

But obscuring that ray of hope at present is the lack of finances for hospital treatment.

Three years ago James Walter Childress was working under a car when the car fell. His back was broken and spinal column severed, resulting in complete paralysis of his legs and body from the waist down.

The North Carolina Rehabilitation Division spent all available hospital money for his case during his long stay in Baptist Hospital in Winston-Salem following the accident. Other groups helped some, along with the hospital.

Now an opportunity has come for the crippled man to go to the Woodrow Wilson Rehabilitation Center at Fishersville, Va. It is estimated that in one year's time there he can become able to walk with aid of braces and can learn a trade. His prospects there would be good for walking again, and for becoming able to earn a livelihood for his family.

But an obstacle to that program has developed, in the form of skin ulcers caused by lying in bed so long. Doctors say this trouble can be cured by extensive hospital treatment and skin grafting, which costs much money.

With 90 days treatment in a hospital he would be ready for the rehabilitation center, and the State Rehabilitation Division could take over there and pay for that training. But no funds are available for the hospital care and treatment needed to get him ready for rehabilitation.

James T. Price of Winston-Salem, rehabilitation counselor, said in reporting on his case that Childress has a very responsive attitude and would like nothing better than to become able to make his own way and provide for his wife and little daughter. They are now at the home of her parents.

In relation to livestock prices, the prices for milk and its products in 1948 were the lowest on record.

WELL OWL DECLARE — Tom Cooley, son of Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Cooley of Klondike Farm, holds a critter which proved smart enough last week to fool three steel traps but fool enough to get smarted by the trap on the next venture. The Cooleys found a hen slaughtered and torn to pieces one morning last week. Steel traps were set to capture the killer but the following morning showed three steel traps sprung, all the remaining chicken gone and no culprit. But the second setting netted this huge owl who is now in captivity at the farm. (PHOTO BY BELL)
