The Glamour of Love.

Let Cristobel at the seashore. She was then eighteen years old, and I was thirty four. I was introduced to her the evening I read the Ocean House, and were members of a party to go to the beach by moonlight. Cristobel had a pair of brown eyes with which she looked at me in a way that showed she was greatly pleased with me. In the soft moonlight it struck me that she was watery beautiful. There was a ripple of chat from those about us, a splashing of the breakers on the beach, a slender girl beside me and I was supremely happy. The next day we all bathed, and I expected Cristobel to avail herself of my assistance. She stood on the beach a moment before going into the water, and, though she had on a bathing suit, she did not look as beautiful as the evening before. Her figure was somewhat unalar, and her complexion in the sunlight was not what it had been in the moonlight. John Caldwell, a man of forty, stepped up to her, and as she looked at him I saw the same satisfaction in her eyes I had noticed in my own case. He gave her his hand, and they were soon merrily rising and falling with the waves. I had a very slow time. Ever minute I was watching Cristobel. In the evening when I met Cristobel on the piazza I was surprised. She noticed it and asked me what was the matter, but without waiting for a reply started to the beach, a short distance from the hotel. Of course I followed her, and it was not long before I showed her that I was jealous of John Caldwell. "Mr. Caldwell!" she exclaimed. "Why, he's old enough to be my father!" This comforted me, though I remembered that I was but six years younger than Caldwell. Cristobel and I sat in the moonlight till 9 o'clock, and though it was but the second day of our acquaintance, I was making love to her. She was very easy to make love to. Indeed she seemed to draw it out of me irrespective of my own volition. Before we parted I had been transported to heaven by a kiss. Hearing the music at the hotel she proposed to go back and have a dance. We waltzed once and separated. Not being in a mood to enjoy the society of any one else, I sat on the piazza smoking and thinking of my new found love. Then I went down to the place where we had been sitting. It was occupied by another couple. I was turning away when I recognized John Caldwell's voice, followed by Cristobel's laugh. The next morning when we all started to bathe I was very cool to Cristobel, but she made no scrooples of joining me and good naturedly bantered me on being what she called "so cross." By the time we were ready to go in to the water she had succeeded in bringing back my good humor and I assisted her in bathing. There were splendid broad billows rolling in over a gently inclined beach before breaking, and the exhilaration was delightful. Cristobel was as excited as a child. "She is a child," I said. "How stupid of me not to give her the leeway of a child! And yet how delicious to be loved by one so innocent!" If there is any time when it is impossible for a woman to look attractive, it is when she is leaving the water. And, as I watched Cristobel going to the bathroom it seemed to me she had the figure of a spirit. When Cristobel left us, she was not engaged to me or to John Caldwell, though in comparing notes afterward we discovered that she had fooled us both. She went abroad and stayed away three years. When she returned I heard of her at the seashore and concluded, largely from curiosity, to run down and meet her. Perhaps the circumstances under which I met her this second time were unfavorable. At any rate, I was very much shocked at the change in her; was it in her or in me? Had not the glamour been worn away. Not finding her in the hotel on my arrival, I strolled down to the beach. It was the bathing hour, and a hundred people were in the water.

Presently a long, thin, bony looking girl with spindly shanks emerged and came walking up the sand toward me.

"There is a woman," I remarked to myself, "who should never show herself in bathing clothes. She looks like a drowned grasshopper."

The girl came on and when within a few yards of me threw up her hands and exclaimed: "Well, upon my word! Where did you spring from?"

Aloud I replied: "Delighted to meet you again. How well you are looking!" Inwardly, I exclaimed: "Great heaven! Is this Cristobel?"

We met in the evening on the piazza. She had put on her finest dress and when I joined her received me with her most winning smile. Alas, her cheek was bony and her complexion that of a quadron! Her voice, which three years before had sounded so melodious to me, was harsh. Perhaps there was still some magnetism in the eyes, but the other features were so faulty that these alone did not move me. Really she was but little altered. It was I who saw through other eyes.

"Your manner toward me is changed," she said, with a pout. "A girl can't expect to hold all her lovers all the time," I replied. "What do you mean by that?" she asked coldly.

"After you left us John Caldwell and I compared notes." She gave me a look to observe whether there was any of her old power with me left, then made her excuse to leave me. I departed early the next morning without seeing her.
