Selling Cotton at Public Auction.

Messrs. C. B. Simmons and R. M. Miller, Jr., two of our city cotton merchants, left for Chester, S. C., yesterday to attend the big sale of cotton at public auction, at that place to-day. The cotton, to the amount of 2,000 bales or more, is divided off into lots by the merchants and farmers and knocked down to the highest bidder, the same as anything would be auctioned off. This style of disposing of cotton was inaugurated in Chester last year, when the prices bid went over the market, and of course it proved profitable for the sellers, and the idea of having one big sale every year was adopted. Most of the cotton put up at these sales is owned by people who were able to hold it back until there should be a good demand for the staple, and when that time comes, as it has to-day, they have the cotton ready. The buyers say they do not like this way of getting cotton yet the sale attracts them from all quarters, and they go there and bid on the cotton at figures above the market
