THE NINKUM LAND. ortland Oregonian.

A thingamajig met a thingamaree me day in the land where the ninku and the thingamajig, with a swagger Gave the thingamaree a well-bre And the ninkums all gathered around The thingamajig meet the thingamaree

Your hands are horny, your clother And tattered and torn, and I'm eve That you work for hire! that I can't On my coupons and bonds and rents You fellow, how dare you look at me?" Said the thingamajig to the thingama

Then the 'ree got down on his marrow and he abjectly kissed the dusty stone Where the 'jig had stood, like a slavish thing, The bows in awe of a tyrant king: And the ninkums all laughed and jeer ed to see The craven looks of the thingamaree.

We all must work for our daily bread; Those who will not work may not eat," they said; And whether a man from pride or shame Yould shirk his duties, we equal blame, and no greater difference can we see

Twixt a thingamajig and a thingama-Than 'twixt tweedletedum and tweedletedee.

Twas a long time ago, in a distant Where the ninkums live, you under stand We manage things better here and to those who work the least get the big And the ninkums are those who th work must do The must toil and slave and go hungry And we neither wonder nor laugh t thingamajig or a thingamaree.
