There can be no better medium of advertising than through our columns, as our paper goes daily into the hands of its many readers, thus keeping them ever reminded of our advertising merchants; and as the chief reason for so many advertisements is to have the advertisements read as often as possible, the advantage of advertising in THE DAILY ARGUS is at once evident, as our patrons will have their advertisements read at least every day. LOCAL BRIEFS.

CIRCUS to-morrow.
MRS. W. T. GARDNER is on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. R. B. Proctor, in Durham.

Misses Minnie Cox, of Clayton, and Mamie Johns, of Auburn, are visiting the family of Capt. J. B. Edgerton in this city.

The placing of the Southwestern fast train, between Washington and Atlanta, has been postponed until the 13th of October.

The engagement of Mr. H. A. Guder to speak here to-morrow on the political issues of the day has been canceled for the present.

The admirable and highly interesting communication of Mr. Junius Millard in this issue speaks for itself and will be perused with pleasure, we are sure, by all our local readers.

Quite a party, consisting of Messrs. W. F. Kornegay and E. B. Borden, Mrs. M. L. Lee and Misses Hattie Dewey and Mary Borden, went down to Wilmington yesterday afternoon to hear Sam Jones.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of this city will hold an important meeting in Odd Fellows' Hall this afternoon at 4 o'clock. It is urged that every member and every lady in this city who is allied with the cause of common charity, be present.

It is announced that Col. Livingston, President of the Farmers' Alliance of Georgia, and Col. L. L. Polk, President of the National Alliance, will speak in this city, on Thursday of next week, October 9th. The people are cordially invited to hear them.

We regret exceedingly to chronicle the critical illness of a former and highly esteemed citizen of Goldsboro, Capt. J. D. Winslow, to whose bedside, at his home in Statesville, his brother-in-law Mr. L. H. Castex was yesterday summoned by telegram, and left on the Raleigh train.

The new agent for the R. & D. Railroad warehouse, Mr. C. M. LeVister, from Winston, arrived in the city yesterday and was duly installed by Mr. F. H. Piedmont, who subsequently took the west-bound train for his new office in Charlotte. THE ARGUS welcomes Mr. LeVister to Goldsboro, and in company with his hosts of friends, greatly regrets the departure of Frank Piedmont.

The daily Evening Dispatch of this city has suspended publication, and its editor, Mr. T. C. Diggs, who but recently assumed control of it, has gone "to Virginia for a much needed vacation." Mr. Diggs made many friends in Goldsboro and throughout North Carolina as Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., of this city, and while his newspaper venture was rather unexpected to us all and has met so early a collapse, we hope that his finances did not suffer in the "conflict." There is no avocation in life that so draws on the ability and finances and energies of a man as that of the editor and proprietor of a daily newspaper, and his virtue of perseverance is taxed every day higher than the "productive tariff." THE ARGUS man has been "through the mill" and fall along the road, and counted the mile post for "nigh on to" six years in Goldsboro, and knows what he is talking about—knows what it takes, it's all things necessary, to run a daily newspaper of clean morals and high aims in the town. He is, therefore, schooled to feel the keenest sympathy for his brethren of the quill who venture on the journalistic sea, and "sailing for sunny isles," are wrecked upon the reefs that he himself has so often confronted, right to the leeward, and barely steered past them into the smoother waters by which THE ARGUS has of late years been surrounded. Mr. Diggs takes with him the abiding good wishes of many friends here wherever he may go.

GOLDSBORO YOUNG MEN
As Seen, Known and Reviewed by One of Them—May They All Live Long and Prosper.

Dear Mr. Robinson: In a late issue of THE ARGUS, I saw the announcements that Hugh Miller had been elected Assistant Professor of Chemistry at the University, that Pettus Smith was home for a short visit, that John Miller was elected to a professorship at Raleigh, and that Hiram Grant had returned to Amherst College to pursue his studies there. Here were mentioned four boys whom I have known nearly all my life, and thinking over their different successes, I mentally scanned the list of the boys whom I have known for the past ten years in Goldsboro, boys whom I have grown up with, and with whose names are indissolubly connected all my boyhood's pleasures and hopes, and with pride did I notice that all, without exception, were doing well in the several callings they have chosen. And feeling thus a pride in the success of my old associates, I hope you will pardon me for referring somewhat at length to those who once were Goldsboro's hope, but now are Goldsboro's pride.

I daresay that for the past ten years, there have been no boys at the University of North Carolina who were more popular than Logan Howell, '89, and Hugh Miller, '90. Even while at college, in the way of society and class honors, they reaped the first fruits of that success which they are now beginning to garner—success which we know was merited, because, depend upon it, among college boys, the lucky man deserves the honor. And I am proud of my old school-fellows and play-mates, as to-day I see Miller Assistant Professor of Chemistry at his alma mater, and Howell one of the corps of teachers at the Davis School, one of the best military boarding schools in the country. With equal commendations might I speak of my old friend John Bassett, '88, of Trinity College, who, popular among the boys at Trinity, also made such a reputation for honesty and worth among the professors and trustees that to-day we see him called to a chair in that progressive institution. John Miller, too, is reflecting honor upon his old home, being one of the professors in the Deaf, Dumb and Blind Institution of Raleigh.

So, from among the boys Goldsboro has raised up since the war, she has furnished four professors not yet twenty-five years of age; one to the State University, one to a college, one to a State institution, and one to a military boarding school which acknowledges no superior in the South. Can any other city in the State boast of such a record?

I have spoken thus of these four, because I feel that they deserve it. But in thinking of them, let us not lose sight of others not mentioned. What are Goldsboro's boys doing—yes, boys, for they are hardly yet stepping from youth to manhood—what are they doing? The question is needless. Look around you and see for yourself. These I have mentioned have finished their college courses, yet Goldsboro is still represented at these and other institutions.

The issue of THE ARGUS to which I referred above, spoke of Hiram Grant returning to Amherst College. We all know full well what he is doing, and how he can see success even now in his grasp. I have known him well for ten years, and can say for him what I can say for no other person of my acquaintance. He is the only boy I know who has been going to school regularly, without cessation, ever since he first began, who has not grown tired of his work, but studies as hard to-day as he ever did. And so, not only in our own State colleges is Goldsboro represented, but we have Grant taking special work in the ancient languages at Amherst, Mass., Albert Rosenthal taking civil engineering and mining at Columbia College, in New York, and George Howell at the head of his class at the U. S. Military Academy at West Point. But enough for the college students, they have their mark yet to make, and let us hope they will all be successful.

Goldsboro's boys seem to have an especial aptitude for business. It is because they see so much of it going on around them, that they naturally fall into line. In passing through Raleigh last year, I would often see up about the Capitol, Walter Borden, who was Clerk of Institutions in the Executive Department of North Carolina. A week or two ago, I was again in Raleigh, and there I saw in the same position, Bob Burkhead, and learned that Borden was in Oxford in an excellent business opening and that Burkhead had taken his place. Besides these, we have Pettus Smith in a leading railroad office in the South, Buck and Frank Wiggs and John Dobson in the telegraph business in Georgia and making a success of it, too, and George Denmark in the Treasury Department at Washington City. But why speak of those who are away from home? I saw the other day (again from THE ARGUS) that the offices of Secretary and Treasurer of the Wayne Agricultural Works had been consolidated and that Ed. Borden was filling that important place of trust. In the matter of pharmacists, where will you find a better one than Charlie Miller, with Miller & Shannon, a graduate of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, or Jack Hill, or John Powell, who have left their own city because it is too healthy to need their services, and has gone to where they need him more? I am sure that the people of Goldsboro do not realize the amount of their business that is in the hands of the boys that they have raised up. Think of that, as in your minds you run over the list of your young men, and see in places of business trust such fellows as Craton, Galloway, Fonvielle, Grainger, Cox, the two Edmundsons, Wright, Royall, Humphrey, Barwell, and Griswold. And then think of others who have left you—Joe Royall, for S. C.; the Morris's, for Fla.; Kleber Denmark, for Newber; Tom Holmes, Tom Hill, and others.

In the matter of journalism we see that it was no idle boast that J. E. Robinson made, several years ago, when he nailed to the masthead of his, then little enterprise, his banner bearing these words:

"This Argus o'er the people's rights,
Doth an eternal vigil keep;
No soothing strains of Mala's son
Can lull its hundred eyes to sleep."

And through the years since gone, through adversity and prosperity, he has borne ever onward toward the front, and has made a success of what was then but a venture. And then, younger, but not less determined are the other young men, Kelly and Nash, and may their success be as great as they deserve!

In the profession of law, the young men of the generation of which I speak are not great numerically, but though few in number, being only two and both "Will's" at that—Dorch and Edmundson—they have shown that the will is a great thing in law.

Dorch in his own city (nominated, too, for tax-collector) and Edmundson in Dunn, N. C., are doing well, I'm glad to hear.

But it is in the matter of doctors that Goldsboro challenges the State. One man there and himself a physician, has already raised up and qualified, two of his sons as physicians, and has two or three more coming on in the same line. But let's not anticipate. There is no need to draw on the future while the present offers such advantages. Our list of young doctors, of a few years standing includes our county physician Red Cobb; one of the best surgeons in Eastern N. C., Jim Spicer; one whom we have lent for a while to Fla., Luby Smith; besides a host of lesser lights, including such pushing fellows as John Spicer, Will Jozes, and Kirby Smith.

In this enumeration I have simply tried in a desultory way, to run over the list of the boys I have known so long. In a cursory glance like this, some are necessarily omitted. Being away at College for the last three years, and spending only part of my vacations at home, I have lost sight of some of my old school-fellows and associates. But I have kept up with the most of them. As I write now and think of the boys I used to recite with at the Graded School, I seem to be living those old days over. I'm with the boys at school again. Arlington and Bassett are the "big boys." Covington is, as Prof. Alderman used to say: "Sitting up and looking pretty." Hugh Miller and Dan Hutton are the wife of the school-room. Oh, how it all comes back to me now! And yet it is but a day-dream, and I wake to realize that those who were but boys then, are successful men with men's ambitions, now. And in catching ball, playing base, and conning over Latin and History then, they were but developing within themselves those principles of application which have made them to-day the successful druggists, physicians, business men, lawyers, editors, and professors.

These are my old play-mates, those who helped shape my youthful life and who figured in all my boyish hopes and ambitions. Yet they are the same upon whom to-day I look with pride, as I see them bearing positions of honor and trust, not only in their own city, but throughout their native State as well; ay, not even there has their influence stopped, but I see that into nine States of the Union these Goldsboro boys have gone, carrying in their hearts and hopes their native pluck with them and their allegiance to Goldsboro yet.

All this shows that these boys are talented. Will Goldsboro leave it to the world to find this out when she might make the discovery? As others have honored them already and will hasten to do them honor in the future, let not their own birth-place be backward in recognizing their honest worth and sound ability. Let me, right here, utter my appreciation of a tendency which I hope exists in Goldsboro. If I am not mistaken Charlie Miller is to be the Chief Marshal at the next Goldsboro Fair. I am glad of that, for it shows the tendency to recognize home merit. "Charity begins at home;" so does one's reputation. You recognize your own sons thus at home, and other people will see their worth and recognize them, too. You snub your home talent, and other people will snub it, too. If you want your boys to succeed, help them along what little you can, and they will do the balance. JUNIUS W. MILLARD.
Wake Forest, N. C. Sept. 26th, '90.
