SEPARATION OF CLASSES.

The famous party leader, referring to the wasteful expenditure of money by Quay in Reed's district, says, in a private letter, "newspapers have driven all rich men out of the Democratic into the Republican party."

But is not the distinguished letter-writer at fault? Democratic newspapers never forced any Democrat, rich or poor, into the Republican party. Quay may have absorbed them.

Surely, by this process, we drove no rich man out of the Democratic party. On the contrary, the transaction, to the extent that the Federal Treasury was to have been used, was only the robbery of the right, to stuff the left pocket of the people, and they in consideration of Quay's cunning, were to vote the Republican ticket.

Of a truth the Democratic press has assailed the trusts. One or two members of the jute trust are pretended Democrats. Where a man's treasures [are there will be his heart also.

The rich, to the extent that they sympathize with Quay and are interested in Trusts and in plundering the people through Blaine and Sherman's shame processes of "Reciprocity" have gone out of the Democratic party, and for each of these secessionists a hundred honest workingmen and farmers everywhere have entered the ranks of Reform and of free popular government.

Career of the South.

When we contemplate the career upon which the South has just embarked, with every natural advantage to insure a prosperous voyage, but with her course obstructed and her safety in consequence jeopardized by the aggressive hatred of the Republican party, we are forcibly reminded of some great ship putting out to sea with every breeze in her favor and every prospect of a successful voyage, but forced to repel in her onward progress the attacks of pirates who seek to reduce her crew to submission and to rifle her of her contents.

The Republican pirates may harass the South and reason for a time the rapidity of her forward movement, but they cannot permanently hinder her advance or destroy her rising prosperity even for a time.

All the material forces of the age are on the side of the Southern people in their determination to utilize every resource with which nature has endowed their section. The capital of the world will soon be in collusion with the pioneers of Southern development to raise a wall against the Republican encroachments upon the liberties of the Southern States.

When the South has called to her defense, as she is now so rapidly doing, the pecuniary interests of the most influential portion of the Northern people, the day when the Republican party can injure the Southern people has passed forever. Happily there are evidences that the hour is approaching when this condition of affairs can be said to have been reached.

The Chicago Inter-Ocean is in error in saying that "the New York Star still continues to shout 'Czar Reed.'" For some time the Star has carefully observed the rule of speaking of the new "Man from Maine" as "ex-Czar Reed."

Some critics have made remarks on our continued use of the phrase "ex-Czar" after the big Speaker's re-election in Maine. But no more than one swallow makes a Summer does one district make a Czar.

In setting up for himself as a Czar, Reed undertook to run the whole country through direct suppression of everything but his own will in the House of Representatives and by bulldozing the Senate.

Hence it is that the session winds up, leaving the Speaker an ex-Czar, however great may be his aspirations to future imperial control of the country through the next Presidency, for which the "Boys" in the Republican organizations of New York are now working.—N. Y. Star.
